

SENATE—Friday, March 26, 1993

(Legislative day of Wednesday, March 3, 1993)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HARLAN MATHEWS, a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be established.—Proverbs 16:3.

God of all wisdom, the men and women in this place are mandated by the people to make difficult decisions. They receive lots of advice from constituents, lobbyists, the press, plus various and sundry specialists who know all the answers but have no responsibility for decision. How easy it is, Lord, to advise when one does not have to decide. Grant grace to the Senators to be patient with Monday morning quarterbacks who are busy calling signals but are never in the game.

And grant grace, dear Lord, to the Senators to realize that there is One whose counsel is available and infinitely wise. One in whom they can trust who will establish their thoughts as they commit their work unto Him. Help the Senators to see, Lord, how practical prayer really is.

We pray in His name who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, March 26, 1993.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HARLAN MATHEWS, a Senator from the State of Tennessee, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. MATHEWS thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 1335, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1335) making emergency supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1993, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

(1) Byrd amendment No. 271, to reduce funds for the information systems of the Internal Revenue Service, to delete funding for the General Services Administration Building Fund, and to clarify that none of the funds may be used for low priority programs, projects or activities.

(2) Byrd amendment No. 272 (to amendment No. 271), in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia.

THE SENATE CHAPLAIN

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank our Chaplain on behalf of all Senators.

Our Chaplain emulates that great Confederate general, Robert E. Lee, who said that "Duty"—duty—"is the sublimest word in the English language."

We have watched our Chaplain day after day come to the Senate and lead the prayers of the Senate, as we make our petitions and supplications to the God who created the universe, who flung the stars from his fingers, who hung the world on nothing, who guides the planets in their courses, and who created life and life eternal.

I respect this man. Not many of us would continue on, but this man, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, is a true servant of the King of all Kings and the Lord of all Lords.

I am grateful for the inspiration that he has been to me personally. When I lost my grandson almost 11 years ago, this Chaplain spoke at the memorial service. And I have always remembered his words, as he led the service in reciting the 23d Psalm, which was my grandson's favorite Scriptural passage.

We do not thank people enough, and we do not thank the true servants of God enough.

This man ministers to all of us in our sicknesses. When my wife was in the hospital last summer with shingles—sounds like an exotic carpenter's disease, but it is very painful—the Chaplain came to her hospital room and gave a comforting and strengthening prayer.

I again thank the Senate Chaplain for his supreme dedication to the Senate and to his Lord.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the President's package is contained in the pending amendment before the Senate. This amendment does not prevent other Senators from calling up their amendments.

Amendments may be called up to the committee substitute, amendments may be called up to the bill, and the Senate may act on those amendments.

It would seem to me, if Senators have amendments that they believe the Senate might adopt, they should call those amendments up; not hide behind the facade that the pending amendment shuts them out. It does not.

At the end of the way, when the Senate works its will on other amendments, that pending committee amendment is to be voted on. And it is true that it would wipe out any amendments that the Senate had theretofore adopted. But if Senators believe in their amendments, let them call them up. And if the Senate feels strongly about a major amendment, such as the amendment by Mr. BOREN and Mr. BREAUX, let the Senate manifest its will on that amendment. Let us not hold back.

Emerson said that "God will not manifest himself to cowards."

Let us call up our amendments. I called up an amendment on one occasion, not an amendment that affected my pride, but an amendment that affected my coal miners. I fought for that amendment and worked hard for that amendment. I lost. I believe it was by one vote. I had the majority leader against the amendment, the minority leader against the amendment, and President Bush against the amendment.

Mr. HATFIELD. I was with you.

Mr. BYRD. And my friend from Oregon, Senator HATFIELD, stood with me.

But I fought hard. I lost. My coal miners lost.

But I got up off the canvas, dusted myself off, smiled, and went on to the next battle.

I think, with respect to all Senators—and I do respect all Senators—certainly the Senators who are wanting to call up amendments have a right to call them up. I respect that right. But, Mr. President, it seems to me that it is utterly ridiculous to complain about not being able to call up an amendment when the way is open, ridiculous to talk about an amendment and how badly it is needed and yet not be willing to lay the amendment before the Senate. Let the Senate speak.

The President has reached his decision based, I am sure, on many months of viewing the problems of the country, talking with thousands of people, appearing in townhall meetings all over this country, appearing on TV, on the radio. He took time to discuss his stimulus package with many of us before he submitted this proposal. His people talked with me. I am sure they talked with others—I know they did—about what should be contained in this stimulus package. And based on all of that, all of that work, all of that time-consuming labor and effort, the President came to the conclusion that this was what the country needed.

Standing by itself it can be criticized. But as a part of the overall package—and that is what it is, it is a part of his comprehensive package.

I am for helping this country. We have been in a long recession, over 23 months. And we have already experienced two dips in the so-called recovery. It is a very anemic recovery. It could go into a third dip. If it does, then it may be too late.

The President considers this package as an insurance policy against a triple dip. And he is entitled to a chance. He says: Give me a chance.

I am startled—I am amazed and chagrined—that members of my own party who have said for years we want leadership in the White House, give us a leader, and now that we have a leader, a man who is demonstrating leadership, he is putting his neck on the line, why cannot we, as Democrats, support the President? We all want to see the country come out of this anemic recovery. We want to see people go to work.

This bill is a jobs bill. It also contains $4 billion in unemployment benefits: $4 billion. Four billion dollars. For whom? People who are out of work and people who have been out of work and who will no longer receive benefits come April 5. The first week in April, unemployment benefits for 1.8 million people will run out—1.8 million people. Unemployment benefits will run out.

Where are my fellow Senators who have been saying, "Give us a leader?" We must avoid a triple-dip recession. Here we are, leaving the image that we are fighting among ourselves. Over what? Over that leader's—down at the other end of the avenue—over his package. Is our party going to fail him now?

The unemployment benefits will stop cold. Think about those families who are dependent on that money. Think about them. They must be biting their fingernails right now. "I wonder what is going to happen after April 5? Are those Senators going to quit arguing, dragging their feet?" Those benefits will run out, come April 5.

They have a right to worry. If we do not pass this package, they will be out of luck. Let us get on with debating the merits of this stimulus package. Let it have a chance. Let us debate it. Let us not continue to hold up this legislation, waiting for this President to make some kind of a deal with somebody. I think the American people are sick and tired of deals. This President does not have to deal. The bill was just laid before the Senate yesterday, around 1:30 or 2 o'clock. And by 7 last evening I heard talk about deals. The rumors were, we have to have a compromise.

This President has indicated that he believes this package is vital for the health of the economy and the good of the American people. He is our President. The American people expect him to lead. Are we going to put chains on him? Are we going to weight him down with our little feelings of—perhaps pride? I do not know. But the mere thought that this President has to deal with a Senator or two on this package is off the wall. If this package is going to be filibustered, let it be filibustered by our friends on the other side of the aisle.

(Mrs. BOXER assumed the chair.)

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I can imagine how those whose payments will expire on April 5 will continue to wonder about gridlock when this great party of ours is demonstrating an unwillingness to follow the President on this jobs package. Let Senators who are against the package vote against it. Let Senators who are against the amendment vote against it. Let Senators who are for the amendment vote for it. We see amendments called up all the time here, voted up and voted down. I suggest that our Republican friends call up some amendments. The way is open. A Republican Senator said yesterday, and he is still on the floor today, "Oh, to call up amendments would not be meaningful." Why, I stood here yesterday morning and the night before yesterday and watched Senators on the Republican side call up amendment after amendment after amendment after amendment and each amendment was voted down. Was it meaningful? Did Republican Senators think they had the chance of a snowball in Hades when they called up their amendments? Why, no, they knew they were going to have their amendments beaten. The momentum was there, and they knew it.

Why did they not call up their amendments yesterday on this bill? "Oh, well, it wouldn't be meaningful. The Senator from West Virginia has filled the tree. When it gets to the point when we think we can get meaningful votes, we will call up our amendments."

Well, they did not stand back yesterday morning. How many amendments did we vote on yesterday morning? Seven or eight? How many did we vote on Wednesday evening after the time had run out? Eight or nine? Those were not very meaningful votes, but our friends on the Republican side put us to the test. They called up their amendments, with no debate. Many of us voted blindly on those amendments, because we could not debate them.

I asked for 1 minute to debate one of those amendments yesterday having to do with the rescissions, line-item veto. I was fair. I asked for the other side to have 1 minute also, and a Republican Senator objected. In my 35 years, going on 35 years in this Senate, I have not once objected to a Senator's request to speak for 1 minute, 5 minutes, 10 minutes, 30 minutes. I have never objected. This is the forum of debate, free debate, and when this Senator asked for one little pitiful 60 seconds, they said no.

The Republicans called up their amendments, though, and they had them defeated. Why can they not call up their amendments now? The way is open. If they can demonstrate great support for an amendment, then we might find a way to include that amendment. It is not necessarily a lost cause for those Senators who are worried about this tree.

This package needs to move. The American people selected this President—this President—to lead. Do Democrats want to be seen as blocking the path of this President? The package needs to move quickly if it is to have the effect intended.

Now, we do not have to go home today at 3 o'clock. Last night about 7:30, I was told that too many Senators had gone home. Last night was Thursday night. We have been told that on Thursday nights, "Stay around, we might have votes," yet, Senators had apparently gone home. I suppose they could have been called back, if a vote occurred.

Now, today is Friday, and it is a workday. Why not stay around today and vote? I wonder if we will have enough Senators after 11 o'clock or 12 o'clock or 1 o'clock to wad a shotgun around here? What about Monday? Are we going to have votes on Monday?

We have this bill, an important part of the President's economic package, and if there is one thing that we can be sure that the President will be judged upon, is what happens to this economy? What happens to the jobless? What happens to the unemployment rate?

Here we are in the 65th day of his Presidency and we are fighting his program on our side. I do not question the sincerity of any Senator. I do not say that any Senator has to see eye to eye with me, but this is a part of the President's overall package. It has his name on it. The rope is around his neck if he does not bring this economy out and the rope is also around our necks.

On March 3, Senators voted to extend unemployment benefits by a wide margin. The vote was 66 to 33, 2 to 1, to take that step. The $4 billion needed to fund that extension is in this package—this package. Hear me out there, those who may be watching the Senate. The $4 billion is in this package. There are those whose benefits will expire on April 5, and who are probably thinking, where is the next loaf of bread coming from, what are our children going to do? I do not believe that Senators are willing to prevent those 1.8 million people and their families from getting that money. Senators do not have to go home for a break. We can cut some of that 2 weeks. Robert E. Lee said, "Duty is the sublimest word in the English language."

What is our duty? Our duty is to stay here and get this work done. We ought to be in here tonight. We ought to be in here tomorrow, Saturday, voting. We ought to be in here Monday, voting. We have the debt limit backed up behind this package and the conference report on the budget resolution. We have work to do. Senators ought to make plans to stay and get this work done.

Part of that work is, getting $4 billion out to 1.8 million people by April 5. Do we want to go home without approving these benefits? Is that what we want to do?

This Senator is not willing to do so.

Families of the unemployed are going to feel the crunch, if we stalemate in an argument about exactly when certain moneys should go forward. The President made that decision.

If any Senator wants to call up an amendment, call it up. Let us see what the Senate thinks about it. Let us not stand by and say, well, give me something first.

Senators did not go out across the country like this President did. I do not go anywhere except to West Virginia and my house in northern Virginia. That man went out. He faced the multitude. He answered their questions. He went into the shipyards, into the factories, into the coal mines, out to the farms, into the schoolhouses. He talked to people, went to their churches. This is his package, and it is very important to the country.

Now, if he fails, let it not be said that we Democrats caused him to fail. Let the American people not say that we caused this leader to break his wing.

It is not an argument about whether or not the money should be spent. That is not the argument on this side, whether or not it should be spent. It is an argument about exactly when it should be spent. In the President's judgment, this money needs to go out now. He was elected to lead. Let us move aside and let him lead on the most important matter before this country today—getting people to work and strengthening the economic base of the Nation.

I encourage Senators again to call up their amendments. There are Democrats who have amendments. There are Republicans who have amendments. I will be here to listen to the debates. My colleague, Senator HATFIELD, will be here.

Senator HATFIELD and I may not agree. I may support an amendment; he may vote against the amendment, or to the contrary, just the reverse. But we are here. Senator HATFIELD is here. I am here.

Someone said Senators are tired. Gnaeus Marcius Coriolanus said, "Conquerors should not be tired." I say Senators should not be tired. I have been here the last 3 evenings past midnight. Other Senators went home last night. I stayed here until after midnight. I took a look at my transcript. I like to go over it, and see how I am quoted.

I have been telling Senators that they ought to abide by the rules; they ought to address other Senators in the third person.

Well, I noted in my transcript last night, that I had addressed several Senators in the second person. In the heat of the debate, I forgot.

Now, for the RECORD, I changed that because I want the readers of the RECORD 50 years from now to see what is right, not what is wrong with what I say.

I am not the first to edit my transcript. Daniel Webster did that as well. He would take the transcript to his boardinghouse and keep it sometimes for a week or two, and he would carefully edit his speeches. He did not think about publication so much as he thought about those who would read his speeches in the future. How many former schoolboys in this Chamber have memorized Webster's speeches? But he rewrote much of the transcript.

I will say one other thing about speaking in a bit of anger or passion. Caius Gracchus, the brother of Tiberius Gracchus, was a Roman Tribune in 123 B.C., and it was Caius Gracchus who first moved about on the rostra. Plutarch tells us that he was the first Roman to move from one end of the rostra to the other as he spoke, and to throw his gown off his shoulders. He was a speaker who moved the audiences. But at times he would speak in a strained voice and at times with a violent passion.

Caius Gracchus, therefore, asked his servant Licinius to stand behind him with a pitchpipe and when Caius was speaking, if his voice carried too high a pitch, or broke out with anger, Licinius was to blow the pitchpipe, and give him a softer key. Caius would then tone down his passion and speak with greater propriety.

We all at times may get our voices a little too high. I will try to lower mine now with a plea that Senators come to the floor and call up their amendments.

Mr. HATFIELD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD].

THE SENATE CHAPLAIN

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and I have been associated in many common enterprises particularly in the last 15 years or so.

I would like to go back to his original or his first opening remarks to certainly commend the Chaplain for his fine service to the Senate and giving recognition to his many duties that he performs with such professionalism and such warmth and obvious compassion, to associate myself again with the chairman in commenting briefly on my appreciation for the Chaplain.

Mr. President, I have known the Chaplain for close to 40 years, since he was then associate pastor of a Presbyterian church in Hollywood, CA, and through many associations have come to appreciate him as a most articulate proclaimer of the Gospel for which he had his ordination to proclaim with clarity, succinctness, and with great applicability to daily living. And then when some 26 years ago my family and I moved to Washington, we found our way into the Fourth Presbyterian Church in Bethesda where he was then the senior minister. My children had the opportunity to hear the Sunday school program that had a special focus on youth—probably one of the largest congregations of young people of any church in the whole district area; again, that wonderful association that led to his being identified as the Chaplain here in the U.S. Senate.

The status of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee then shifted to the minority leader for a period of time—with all due respect and affection, not long enough perhaps but certainly at least for 6 years—and then the majority leader again. But as had been over the tradition of the history of the Senate, the Chaplain was not a political appointee and has remained free of political identity because he serves all the Senators—the D's, the R's, the I's or what other designation our party labels may be given to us.

So he has continued on as Chaplain now since 1981.

We know the Chaplain as one who is a pastor, as shepherd of the flock. As the chairman has indicated, it is not just to the 100 Senators, but to the pages, to the staff, to the clerks, to the police, to all those who make up the great infrastructure and make it possible for the U.S. Senate to function.

Of late, the Chaplain has certainly performed his duty under difficulties. We all pray for his continuing recovery and strengthening day by day. But I join in saying that too frequently we take many of these folks for granted—the waitresses, the chefs that prepare the food, those who come and gather our refuse and garbage, those who patrol the safety of our premises, all of those who contribute so much, those who sit day by day and listen to all of the pontificating and the speech-making, sometimes a little hot air, and do so with grace, with politeness, and charity.

And so many of these we take for granted. I am so happy that the Senator from West Virginia this morning took a few moments to pay special words of commendation and appreciation of love for our Chaplain, Richard C. Halverson.

Mr. LIEBERMAN assumed the Chair.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I am again in the situation where I want to be supportive of the President, and I do not think there is a person on this side of the aisle who does not have the time ambition, the same dream, the same hope, the same commitment to a strengthening of our economy as anyone on the other side of the aisle.

This is not a partisan matter. If our country hurts, everyone hurts. But I also feel that there is in a pluralistic society always differences of viewpoint, differences of opinion. And as a consequence, I do not think there is any one approach that is sacrosanct to solve a problem. I think the greatest way to solve problems is when we can move together in a bipartisan manner to join and demonstrate to not only the President but to the American public that their elected representatives are committed to resolving an issue, not for the benefit of one party or the other, or for an incumbency, but for the benefit of the American people.

Let us recognize too that there is diversity and pluralism on both sides of the aisle. The distinctions of pluralism and diversity do not make the aisle.

I stood on this floor when I was the only Republican who was supportive from the very beginning of the motor voter, overwhelmingly supported by the Democrats, overwhelmingly opposed by the Republicans. Even yesterday there were two Democrats on that side of the aisle that joined the Republicans in saying no, this is not the best budget resolution that we can craft.

We have liberals, moderates, conservatives on both sides of the aisle. Pluralism and diversity is one of the strengths of this country—political pluralism, religious pluralism, economic pluralism, social pluralism. I am not one of these who think that we all have to conform whether it is correct political speaking or correct political thinking. That has too much the tone to me of conformity and attack upon diversity. I think in all social relationships, there is a degree of decency, politeness, good manners that should dictate our language rather than saying, oh, this is the only nomenclature you can use, that we have to be sensitive to people of course. But when correct political thinking and correct political speech says this is the dogma, this is the nomenclature and no other will fit, privately or publicly or otherwise, I tend to resist this.

I was reared under free speech. I defended free speech at a time when free speech was being circumscribed of all places at my graduate alma mater, Stanford University; that in 1948 they would not allow a political candidate on the campus to make a speech. Can you imagine?

Well, those of us on the Republican side were just as determined for free speech as the small band of progressives who were supporting the candidates of Henry Wallace for President and Glenn Taylor of Idaho for Vice President—a handful of students.

As you recall, the American Communist Party had endorsed Henry Wallace at that time for this progressive party bid for the Presidency.

Well, when the university said, "We will not have him on the campus; we will not allow him to speak," we joined, we who were Dewey supporters. Not many people remember him. Governor Dewey of New York. We got a flatbed truck with some public address system and a guitar for Glenn Taylor, known for his guitar music. He was far less a guitarist than our chairman is a fiddler in talent, but nevertheless it was his trademark. We backed that truck up to the edge of the campus, at the gates of the campus, and we the students stood on the campus property, and Glenn Taylor was officially off campus, and we gave him a great cheer and applause, not because we were going to vote for him, but to demonstrate our determination to exercise free speech.

I say all of this only to background this, that there is nothing that is so sacrosanct, locked into concrete, that it cannot be changed or modified. And I believe that is the essence of legislation. We have already changed this package. I joined with the chairman to change this package. The chairman said we should change this package. We changed it in the committee by the substitution of a formula on the distribution of a summer jobs program. First change. We already proved that it was not sacrosanct as presented by the President.

Second, on the floor of the Senate yesterday, the first amendment that was cosponsored by the chairman and myself was to set a criteria, so that some of these items that the House of Representatives had used in their debate in opposition to the package would be eliminated by criteria. And, hopefully, more of that will be eliminated by that amendment yesterday, setting forth the requirement for publishing of criteria.

You ask why there are other things that should be eliminated. Let me list a few we did not eliminate yesterday but, hopefully, through the criteria, will be sifted out:

There was $1 million to construct a casino in Connecticut; $2 million to renovate a theater in Kentucky; $1.4 million to build a grocery store in Minnesota; in Illinois, $120,000 to repaint a water tank; $2.4 million in Massachusetts to restore a tower and cottage; in Minnesota $1.4 million to build another grocery store, and the list goes on.

Remember, the purpose of this particular supplemental appropriation—No. 1, it is an emergency. Why? Well, one reason is so that it will not be scored in our 1993-94 appropriations cycle, and also to avoid sequestering; it will still add $19 billion to the deficit. No offset in that sense.

Can we say that all parts of this bill, and all those accounts that will be expended out to certain projects like I have read that are not in the bill, as such, but are in the programs that we are appropriating moneys to their accounts, are these truly emergencies?

You know, they always say in the business we are in that to try and explain to the public, process is the most difficult problem we have. Process. I suppose we are in a process now, like we are in the budget resolution process, that is most difficult to really explain. I will tell you what the people will understand, whether it is complicated or not, and that is that they are going to have an increase in the deficit on this particular bill, without the offsets required under the 5-year budget resolution.

Mr. President, another factor that this bill is supposed to do is to provide jobs immediately. And it will do that, in part. But, certainly, it will not do it in all cases. That is why I think there are some very legitimate amendments pending here on the floor to test it out, as in the case of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAU] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN]. These two gentlemen have spoken at length yesterday on the matter of trying to phase this package in, to give it a test run, in a sense—this is one of the reasons—to give it a test the first year. So there is reticence already demonstrated on the diversity of both sides of the aisle. This is not a Republican versus Democrat matter.

Well, you know this is not the first time that we have had proposals for a jobs stimulus, although this subject has not been debated at length in the history of our Republic.

Let us go back for a moment to 1980, to a report on job stimulus that was issued then by the Joint Economic Committee, chaired by Senator Lloyd Bentsen, Democrat from Texas, who is now our Secretary of the Treasury. Few men have been held in such high esteem on both sides of the aisle as Senator Bentsen. I am privileged to count him and his wife, B.A., as very dear friends, as well as associates.

Mr. President, the current Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bentsen, characterized the Government stimulus program in the following way in June 1980. Remember, June 1980 was a time of the misery index, double-digit inflation and double-digit unemployment, probably the most severe economic times in recent years, as far as suffering of the people. And the misery index was created by the Democrats to identify the misery of people. Very frankly, I thought it was a very effective mode of communication.

This is what Senator Bentsen said:

Such programs are not timely enough to even take effect before the end of a recession.

By the way, Mr. President, are we in a recession? Senator Bentsen, at that time, was talking about something that was very evident out there in terms of the economy.

Let us not forget, as my good friend from Mississippi, Mr. COCHRAN, said yesterday, we have grown; and it is not his opinion, not his statistic, it is a basic statistic—we grew at 4.8 percent in the last quarter alone. Hardly a time of recession.

Let us not forget, too, that in the last year of President George Herbert Bush, if you please, we had 1.5 million new jobs in that last year of the Bush administration. The statistic did not get out soon enough to help him in November. But as we heard the trashing of our economy by our political opponents all during that campaign period, that was a year that we had 1.5 million new jobs created, which made 118.5 million Americans at work—a historic high. It was pretty silent in the media.

Let me continue with Senator Bentsen's comments about stimulus programs:

The duration of employment for public works jobs is too short to provide meaningful relief for the hard-core unemployed. Federal public works programs often displace State and local programs meaning that Federal jobs may simply substitute for State and local jobs. As a consequence, net job creation is quite low, leading to a very high cost per job ranging—

Now remember this figure—ranging from $70,000 to $198,000.

That is per job.

Mr. President, I might point out that Senator Bentsen was talking then about 1980 dollars.

Is this just one Democrat speaking as an isolated case as he looks and reviews the question of what importance and what impact a jobs stimulus package may be, or proposed program?

Again, as has been quoted before, let me take the current OMB Director, Mr. Leon Panetta. I want to say, too, that Leon Panetta is a former Member of the House of Representatives, and having known him over a period of time I hold him in the highest regard. I think he was considered then, as a Member of the House, by both sides of the aisle as a man who knew his figures, a man who knew how to debate the issues because he had done his homework. And I wish him well in his new job as much as any appropriator can wish an OMB person success. We have somewhat of a love-hate relationship with that department. Nevertheless, I certainly wish Leon Panetta great success.

This is the OMB Director speaking about the current moment. We all know that 1980 was different than 1993. I am not suggesting that anything is static or that anything is always in an exact parallel, but, remember, Senator Bentsen was talking about a generic proposal, a jobs stimulus package.

So, when Mr. Panetta says he estimates the bill will provide only 219,000 jobs in 1993, this package with $19 billion added to the deficit will produce 219,000 jobs in 1993, the rest of this year, this amounts to $89,041 per job. Remember, Senator Bentsen said those jobs could range between $70,000 and $198,000. Maybe we are lucky now with only $89,000 in that range quoted by Senator Bentsen.

Let us get a point of reference, a point of comparison here for just a moment. We are talking about 219,000 jobs for the remaining period of this year, 1993, by a $19 billion jobs stimulus package.

Last month the private sector increased employment by 365,000 jobs in 1 month. This is a $19 billion package to create 219,000 jobs for the rest of this year of some 9 months. I would not say that had much cost-benefit ratio. If we were judging a water project in the far West on an engineer's basis of cost-benefit, it would not reach parity.

Now, Mr. President, again I want to refer to the fact that if you are out of a job, if you are unemployed today, that is a major crisis. I think we can quote statistics oftentimes to the point where we lose the human face, where we lose the individual.

If we have 219,000 jobs to be created and if you are unemployed today, that is an important package, and I am not denying that at all. But what I am saying is that I think we have to compare this and contrast it and evaluate it on the basis of cost to the taxpayer in the long run because those who are unemployed now who might be employed from this package will be also shouldering an additional part of that burden of the deficit over many years to come as well as our children, their children, and their grandchildren.

So, Mr. President, I just want to indicate that I have reservations about this package. I have serious reservations, as do some colleagues on both sides of the aisle, about this package as constituted, and I think we have to really look at the picture from both the short term and the long term. I have a very strong feeling that we have some amendments that we would like to have considered and that will perhaps be offered.

I want to say to the chairman I agree that the chairman has played by the rules. There is no one who has ever, I think, found him not playing by the rules. He plays by the rules in a tough, hard manner, but always a courteous and considerate one.

Mr. President, I want to also say: Let us realize that the playing field at this particular moment in our parliamentary procedure, all created by the rules, has certainly advantaged the manager of the bill in the sense that whatever amendment is offered by either side, and if adopted, can be wiped out when we come to the pending question and the disposal of the pending question that now is before this Senate.

So, you might say, yes, we can go through the exercise, but there is no way that we can have any sense that if our amendment or anybody's amendment—not just this Senator's amendment—anybody's amendment is adopted after debate, and 99 to 1 it might turn out in support for that amendment, that amendment is wiped out if the Senate proceeds on through with the pending question and votes the pending question. That amendment is wiped out. I believe I have stated the parliamentary situation correctly.

Now, Mr. President, I do not want to hold up people from offering amendments because I am here to do business. As the chairman already indicated, we both are comanagers of this bill. I would like to make a few more comments before I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATFIELD. Yes, I yield to the Senator without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. BYRD. And for a question only.

Mr. HATFIELD. Pardon me?

Mr. BYRD. And for a question only.

Mr. HATFIELD. Oh, I am not planning to yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Oregon to say he yields the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD. For a question, I meant to say.

Mr. BYRD. I beg your pardon.

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield the floor to the Senator for a question only.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] has the floor but yields for a question by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HATFIELD. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi for a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding. May I ask under a parliamentary inquiry, is it in order for me to submit a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair?

Mr. HATFIELD. I would yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Mississippi may do so.

Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. If this Senator yields for that purpose, he has a right to yield for that purpose.

Mr. COCHRAN. My inquiry is—

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I do not yield the floor at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon retains the floor.

Mr. HATFIELD. I do not yield to any Senator at this time.

Mr. President, again I would like to go back to this matter of the package that is before us in matters relating to what it will achieve and what it will not achieve. I think it is well to keep in mind that in this package there are those portions which I do not know anyone would disagree with, seriously at least, because we are looking at moneys for the highway trust fund that will increase highway construction and airport construction. This adds to the infrastructure. This has hopefully some immediate job impact.

And, by the way, even though the results of this may be good, we still have an emergency declaration that creates a nonscoring for the current fiscal committees in 1993, but certainly does add to the deficit.

I think any of us know that this highway trust fund that has been enhanced through the reforms made in the 1991 Transportation Act, is very significant to us as far as strengthening the infrastructure, both as to the operation and maintenance upkeep, but also in new construction.

I am particularly happy we took out the constrictions on that in order to include light rail and alternative systems. We had a decision to be made in our State for a new freeway or light rail and, as a consequence, we have been able to embark upon a far more energy-efficient system and far greater support to our environmental requirements than to add more auto traffic in a major congested area.

I think this demonstrates again the necessity of addressing not only the infrastructure for jobs, but for the needs of moving people in a more efficient and energy-efficient manner.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the current question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I feel that we are looking, again, at a common desire that we both have on both sides of the aisle, and that is to help the economy and to help the President, because in helping the President and uniting our efforts to support a strengthening of our economy, it certainly is mutually beneficial.

I think, frankly, the politics of it are such that there is enough credit to go around.

So I appeal, again, to the Senate to let us consider these matters that they may have as far as differing or subtracting or adding to or modifying the current bill before us and to get on with the business.

Very frankly, I join the chairman in saying I would like to be out of here for the weekend. But I am ready to be here today, tonight, tomorrow, whatever it is that is necessary to complete the business of the Senate. I do feel that it is awfully important, though, to recognize that we have at this moment a parliamentary situation that does not invite these amendments, really.

I heard the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Oklahoma exercise a great deal of energy, good statistics, good data, good persuasive arguments. But they knew, we know on this side of the aisle, and those on that side of the aisle know, that we are in a very correct—legally, technically, ethically, morally correct—parliamentary position, but the playing field is not really that even for any changes in this bill that have come to the floor.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have viewed with considerable alarm the certain surge of attendance on the Republican side. I counted 10 or 12 Senators who came into the Chamber all at once.

And I looked about me: Where were my troops? There is only one—one—the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAU]. He has about won half of his case with me already, just by being here with me.

Here is one man, one fellow Democrat, who stands here with a smile on his face. And here are all of these menacing people on the other side.

I am glad that we have that kind of attendance on the other side. Of course, I figured they were going to try to get the yeas and nays on the pending amendment. I suggested to the Republican leader yesterday that we keep open this pending amendment so that in the event a Senator offers an amendment, if a Senator has the courage of his convictions and will submit his amendment to this Senate for a decision, and if the Senate adopts the amendment, and if it is a major amendment such as the Breaux-Boren amendment, then I would think that the Senate has spoken its will, and we might find a way to include it.

Without the yeas and nays on my pending amendment, I can modify my amendment to include whatever amendment it is that gets a sufficiently large majority to be persuasive to the President and to other Senators.

I have a feeling that the Republican leader was of the opinion that the Republicans did not want this amendment to be left open to modification by the author. That is the impression I got.

Now the Republicans have closed it off—they say they do not have a level playing field—they took it upon themselves to close off an opportunity to get the pending amendment modified without unanimous consent, to include any amendment on which the Senate indicates strong support. Now that is closed off.

The only way to be included now in the pending amendment would be by unanimous consent. They want this whole matter to rise to a head on the pending amendment without modification. That is all right with me.

There are other ways. There are ways, believe me. The Republicans think they have shut off—let me say to the press before they all leave—our Republican friends think now they have shut off any possibility of an amendment that is carried on this floor, any possibility of its becoming law.

They have not closed off all the avenues. I am not going to tell them how, but there is a very good avenue wide open.

If Senators will call up their amendments, and if the Senate adopts their amendments, then there is still a way to get such amendments included in this bill.

You Republicans brought 11 or 12 Senators in here, and this poor little old Senator from West Virginia, standing up here with his finger in the dike—Phoebe Cary, you will remember, wrote about a boy who kept his finger in the dike. He stood there and, with the strength of his single arm, held back the sea and saved the village.

And here is this Senator who came from the red clay of Mercer County, WV, went to a two-room schoolhouse, worked 10 years here in Washington to try to get himself up to the equal of some of these peerless Senators; never intended to be an attorney. A country boy between two lawyers is like a fish between two cats. I never intended to be a lawyer. But I wanted to improve myself.

Here is this little old boy from the country. Rustic boob, they could say, I suppose. Rustic boob from West Virginia, that poverty-stricken, down-at-the-mouth State where those hillbillies live in shacks and walk without shoes, some people like to think. And here, this army, virtual army of Republican Senators walked in these doors. I wondered, what in the world is about to happen now, to me? Why, there are enough Republican Senators here to lynch me. They can ride me out of town on a rail. I was looking around for my support on this side and I only see my brave staff aide. He is still here with me. He is still with me. He is here as Strato was with Brutus.

But the servant was there, carrying Brutus' sword, in case Brutus decided to commit suicide. He had his dedicated servant with him for that purpose. And Cassius did the same thing, by the way. He committed suicide and used the same dagger that he had plunged into the veins of Caesar. He had his servant help him execute himself.

My faithful—my faithful staff director of the Appropriations Committee was here, the best—best—best there is anywhere, with him on my side, and God on my side with his troops of angels standing in the shadows. If a man be right, though he eat but a crust of bread; if a man be in the right, though the right be on the scaffold and the wrong be in the lofty seats of power in Washington, if he is in the right, God stands in the dim shadows and watches over his own.

I am here, now, almost alone. I see most of my Republican friends have wandered off into the—hills.

I only know of, actually, three amendments on the Democratic side. One is the Breaux-Boren amendment. Senator FEINSTEIN had an amendment, and Senator KOHL had one. That is all we have on this side.

My Republican friends, if they have amendments, let them call up their amendments and I will yield the floor. Let us have some votes on amendments. If we are not going to have votes, let us talk. Let us have some people on this side of the aisle. I need to take a rest. I need to sit down. I need to get off my feet. I need to call my wife and ask how our little dog Billy is doing this morning. He was not very well this morning. I came in late last night and he was there to greet me. And this morning he had not had enough sleep. I got home after midnight and my poor little dog Billy—and the love and affection that little dog has for Robert C. Byrd—you ought to see that display, that little dog is tired, and this morning he was still wanting to sleep. I would like to get on the phone and ask Billy—ask my wife: Put Billy on the phone.

I am tired. Nobody here but me? Would Senator BREAUX be willing to call up an amendment and let us have a vote? Call it up.

I will tell you what the Senator could do—or even I could do it. I could call up his amendment. I could call up the amendment by Mr. BOREN and Mr. BREAUX, and we could debate that amendment. I do not want to do that. But I have the right to do that. Do Senators know that? I have the right—and so does any other Senator—to call up anybody's amendment that is at the desk. Any Senator who has an amendment at the desk, I can call it up as though it were my own.

Now I could call it up and leave it there. The Senate could work its will on it. I hope Senators will not force me to do that. I could call it up and as long as no action is taken on the amendment I could, having called it up, withdraw it. I can do that.

I would like to debate a target; not a moving target. I would like to see the amendment in its final form pending before the Senate. I plead with my friend from Louisiana to talk with his distinguished compatriot and his comrade-in-arms, Senator BOREN, and call up their amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER].

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I begin by complimenting our distinguished President pro tempore for his enlightening remarks. When the distinguished Senator from West Virginia takes the floor, there is some uncertainty as to the scope of the history lesson or the references to his home life or the activities and sleepiness of his dog Billy. But it is always enlightening.

When he made a comment about 11 Republicans on the floor, alluding to 11 to 1—discounting Senator BREAUX for just a moment—I was reminded of a story my father told me. My father served in World War I. And Cpl. Alvin York was a great hero of my father's. He was later promoted to sergeant, where the title of the movie comes from. But there was one sequence, historically accurate, where there were 40 German soldiers and just Corporal York to defend.

Corporal York was a sharpshooter and he moved with stealth around the entire German contingent so that the Germans thought that there was a mighty force that they were facing. And as he moved around he picked them off one by one. And the conclusion of the story was that there were 40 German soldiers and Corporal York, 40 to 1, and Corporal York outnumbered them.

I am reminded of that story when I hear Senator BYRD speak today. If it is only 11 to 1, Senator BYRD still outnumbers the 11. And when he said he went to law school, I am sure his professors got a good legal education by having Senator BYRD in class with them.

It seems extraordinary to this Senator, after having been to law school and after having practiced law and after having debated Senator BYRD with some frequency—we do not do it anymore—we have to come back and reargue whether there has to be an objection or no objection for yielding the floor for a question, which we did for many hours a few years ago, but it would be hard for me to imagine that Senator BYRD would not teach more law in law school than he would learn.

I was in my office this morning when I heard Senator BYRD speak and watched him on television say that he was prepared to vote today and prepared to vote tomorrow, Saturday, prepared to vote on Monday, prepared to cancel the recess. I thought back to November of 1991 when I made a similar speech. I am sure my speech was not the first because Senator BYRD has been here since 1959, and in the House since 1953. I have studied his career with some diligence. I have not read both of his volumes yet, but I am working on them.

It may be that Senator BYRD made the speech before and many Senators made the speech about skipping a recess, attending to the business of the Senate and voting on a Friday afternoon, voting on Saturday, and voting on Monday. I agree with Senator BYRD on that proposition because I believe that there is much Senate business which is unfinished.

I came over this morning, Mr. President, to file an amendment to the pending legislation, which I did. It is nominated amendment No. 274. It is health care reform legislation which this Senator introduced at an earlier point on Tuesday of this week, Senate bill 631. And it follows legislation which this Senator introduced on January 21, Senate bill 18. I did that on the first legislative day. It follows a series of bills which I have introduced in prior Congresses, trying my best to address the problem of health care.

When I heard Senator BYRD talk about voting on Saturdays, and on Mondays, taking care of the business at hand—and I had been giving serious consideration to offering this amendment and bringing it to a vote—I thought this might be a good time to bring an amendment to a vote since it will not count.

May the RECORD show that is the first time that Senator BYRD laughed audibly during the course of my comments, notwithstanding the clarity of the prior comments.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator cannot prove that by the RECORD.

Mr. SPECTER. No, but I can by your interjection, and I can always file an affidavit or two.

But I have addressed this problem of health care repeatedly, Mr. President, and I did so last July 29 when I offered an amendment on health care to legislation which was pending on the energy bill.

As the RECORD will show, the distinguished majority leader came to the floor and said that amendment does not belong on this bill. I said I agree and I am prepared to take it off if the distinguished majority leader would give a date certain to take up health care reform. The distinguished majority leader said he could not do that, the schedule was too complicated.

So I reminded him that he had done that on product liability and set a specific date, September 8. Notwithstanding that, no commitment was forthcoming, and we voted. It was a party-line vote, and it was defeated.

About that same time, another Senator had made a speech, which I saw on C-SPAN that night which concerned me greatly about the inactivity, the ineptitude of the Republicans refusing to do anything when Chief of Staff Sununu would order them to the contrary. I came to the floor and sharply disagreed with that.

That Senator had said that Washington was a one-man town, one-person town, the President controlled it. I strongly disagreed with that. Perhaps there is no Senator who disagrees more with that one-man, one-person town than Senator BYRD who has spoken repeatedly about the powers and the importance of the U.S. Senate, the U.S. Congress.

I remind those who may be listening, perhaps inform some, that the Congress is article I in the Constitution; that is, the first article, written before the article on the executive, article II. Both were written before article III on the judicial system. But the judiciary has superseded both the Congress and the executive, as we have seen the Constitution interpreted. We have not interpreted it. The Supreme Court has.

But I believe that Congress can act, Mr. President, and I believe that we are long overdue on acting on health care legislation. I am very concerned that health care legislation may not be acted on in 1993.

I saw a quotation from the distinguished chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI, saying that he thought health care would not be legislated this year. I saw the distinguished majority leader on "Face the Nation" a few weeks ago saying that he thought we could have a bill by summer. But there appears to me to be—well, I will say on my own that I have some question about that. The distinguished majority leader made a comment, as I recollected, that he worked on health care for 6 to 8 years and we were ready to legislate.

I believe, Mr. President, that the Congress is ready to legislate, and I believe that Washington is not a one-man town, not a one-person town, not a one-man or a one-woman town, but is a town with coordinate branches, with authority to come from the Congress and the United States, as well as from the President. What I think we need is a bill on the floor which is a critical mass to begin to work.

One of the greatest learning experiences I have had in this body was the Clean Air Act of 1990 when a very tough piece of legislation came to the floor and the Senate divided into task forces and went to work and crafted a bill, not a perfect bill. We do not craft perfect bills. We are just men and women, but we got a bill done which I think was an improvement. I think, in fact I would say I know, that it is high time that we went to work on health care legislation.

I introduced Senate bill 18 on January 21 and said in my floor statement at that time—while complimenting President Clinton on an outstanding inaugural speech—that I had hoped he would do more to address the economic recovery of the country and health care legislation.

Yesterday we agreed to a budget resolution. I was sorry to see that budget resolution adopted, Mr. President, largely along party lines. I have said both publicly and privately, and I have said on the floor of the Senate, that I want to cooperate with the new President. I want to help him solve the problems of the country. I know that the people of America are looking for answers and they do not care whether they are answers from Republicans or answers from Democrats, they want answers.

I know that yesterday two Members of the other side of the aisle—the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY] and the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. KRUEGER]—voted against the budget resolution. It may be that in Senator KRUEGER's vote, a person who is up for election, now having filled the seat of the distinguished former Senator from Texas, Senator Bentsen, it makes a suggestion as to what a Senator thinks when the Senate is answerable to his constituency in rather short order because that election is coming up within the next several weeks.

But I say again that I want to work with the President, and I hope we can find a way to address the appropriations process and economic recovery without the Social Security tax.

I believe, Mr. President, it is unconscionable to tax middle Americans the way middle Americans will be taxed under the budget resolution. To increase Social Security taxation on an individual earning $25,000 a year just is not right, or on a married couple earning $32,000 a year.

Structuring a tax package to have an energy tax, Btu's, which taxes everyone, just is not right. To say there is going to be an offset by a tax credit, I know a lot of Philadelphia lawyers, Mr. President, and I do not know any who can figure out these offsets on tax credits, or many people earning less than $30,000 a year who will be able to do so.

I am figuring out my taxes right now, which I do every year. I figure out my own tax return so that I can keep track of my finances and see how complicated it is for people to fill out the Federal return, and is it complicated. You have to go to more subparts, more tables, more charts, and figure out more ways—even the deduction does not stand anymore. You cannot multiply two dependents, my wife and I, by a number. You have to go figure out a complicated formula on adjusted gross income. Itemized deductions with interest payments, you cannot deduct that anymore. You have to go to another formula and figure that out.

So that if you have a relatively simple return—strike that. There is no such thing as a relatively simple return. And the Pennsylvania State income tax is up now. I remember the tremendous fight in 1970 to impose a State income tax at 1 percent, and now it is 2.95, almost 3 percent, and local taxes. The Philadelphia tax forms are a blizzard of complexity.

I do not think the American people ought to be asked for more taxes until we cut excessive Federal spending. I think it is high time in the Congress of the United States and in the Senate of the United States—the Senate is part of the Congress—that when we appropriate money for a bill, we ask a very direct question: Is this bill sufficiently important so that we ought to pay for it with an increase in taxes? Is this bill sufficiently important so that we ought to pay for it with an increase in taxes?

If the answer to that is not yes, we ought not to appropriate the money and borrow the money. And when President Clinton has talked about decreasing the deficit by $500 billion over 5 years, that gives the listener the impression that the deficit is going to be decreased by $500 billion over 5 years. What else would someone think when they heard that the deficit was going to be decreased by $500 billion over 5 years? But it is not true.

What is true is that the rate of increase is going to be slowed so that at the end of 5 years, the deficit will not be $300 billion a year; it will be $200 billion a year. So that after 5 years, the deficit is not going to be decreased by $500 billion, but the deficit is going to be increased by five times $200 billion, or $1 trillion.

In my time in the Senate, Mr. President, as I have argued for the balanced budget amendment and the line-item veto, it has been an embarrassment to see the deficit move from $1 trillion to $4 trillion. We really ought to deal with the deficit.

When I traveled Pennsylvania in 1990 as we took up budget reform, I found quite a good bit of sympathy for paying additional taxes—yes, paying additional taxes—but only if the taxes went to deficit reduction and not to new programs.

So I am yet hopeful we will be able to do something better than the budget resolution which we passed yesterday.

I am hopeful also, Mr. President, that we will be able to take up the issue of health care reform. The bill which I introduced on January 21, S. 18, provides a critical mass to do just that.

I am not going to take the time now, Mr. President. I see that my distinguished colleague from Iowa, Senator GRASSLEY, is on the floor. I am not quite finished, I say to the Senator from Iowa, but I am getting close. In anticipation, the Senator has picked up his microphone. I had intended to talk longer if the floor was not sought by others.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that a summary of S. 18 be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my comments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have awaited an opportunity to offer S. 18 on the pending legislation. There has not been an appropriate bill because it takes up tax issues. I have worked for the past several years with the Republican task force on health care, chaired by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], and it was my hope that we would produce legislation which could be offered in March. And I do not think, as of this sitting, that is going to be possible.

In order to expedite the matter, Mr. President, I took a look at legislation which was pending on the Republican side of the aisle and found provisions in legislation proposed by a number of Republican Senators—Senator KASSEBAUM, Senator COHEN, Senator MCCAIN, and Senator BOND—and incorporated a good many of those provisions, along with the legislation I had in S. 18, and filed this bill, S. 631, on March 23, and filed this as an amendment today.

Before seeking the floor, I had a private conversation with the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, and I said I would file an amendment but I did not intend to offer the amendment today, but I did want to talk about it. I have done that. I have filed the amendment so that it is present in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

This bill provides for managed competition for universal coverage and provides for an individual mandate. We have debated within the Republican ranks mandates on business versus individual mandates and came to a tentative conclusion on the individual mandates so as not to put a burden on business, and especially on small business. I am not sure how that will come out.

In offering this legislation, Mr. President, I do not represent it is the final product or that it is a wish list.

My colleague from Iowa just left the floor, asking me to talk for an additional 10 minutes, which I am glad to do since there is no one seeking recognition and since I would like to talk about this health legislation for a moment or two. But I will not do so if somebody else wants the floor; I can put a summary in the RECORD.

The issue of managed competition, Mr. President, I think is long past due. I believe there is a substantial savings possible from managed health care. I think the estimates of savings up to 20 percent are realistic, with competition within the managed care system.

We speak about that somewhat tentatively because we are not precisely sure how it is all going to work out, and when we legislate in the field I believe we will have to move by a process of trial and error.

The earlier legislation which I introduced, Senate bill 18, provided for preventive care for low-birthweight babies. Almost a decade ago I noticed that in Pittsburgh the African-American infants had the highest mortality rate of any in the country, and I was shocked about that and introduced legislation in 1984—approximately 1984—and then worked with Secretary of Education Sullivan on a program called Healthy Start.

We need a great deal more work on that, Mr. President. When you have a 1-pound baby, a baby about as big as my hand, it is a human tragedy because that child carries those scars for life and sometimes the life is not too long, frequently the life is not too pleasant. And it is a financial catastrophe costing as much as $150,000 or more for each child.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield on that very point because I know the Senator has had a long interest in what I think is a critical problem. If I could just make one point, I would appreciate it.

Mr. SPECTER. I am glad to yield, even if not for a question, with unanimous consent obtained that I do not lose my right to the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. I am not trying to foreclose the Senator.

Mr. SPECTER. I know the Senator is not. I want the unanimous consent propounded. Senator BYRD is on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the rights of the Senator from Pennsylvania are protected.

Mr. SARBANES. On the issue of the infant mortality rate, which the Senator from Pennsylvania was just addressing, this chart shows the ranking of the number of deaths per 1,000 live births in developed countries in 1990. The lowest is Japan, and then Sweden, Finland, Hong Kong, Netherlands, Canada, Germany, France, United Kingdom, Italy, and the United States.

So I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, this is a graphic illustration of the point that he was just making with respect to the issue of infant mortality. The fact of the matter is that the United States is not doing anywhere near as well as the other developed countries in the world. I agree with the Senator that it is a very important issue to address. It is obviously clearly an important issue in human terms. It is obviously, as the Senator just pointed out, a very important issue in economic terms as well. Often the complications involved in these instances cost enormous amounts of money, as the Senator has noted. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my distinguished colleague from Maryland for those cogent and thoughtful remarks. It is characteristic of his work in the Senate. I noticed on the chart that France has a better ranking than does the United States, not quite as good as Japan. I might comment that in Senate bill 18, which I introduced, there is a provision which would pay a premium, or pay an amount of $500, to teenaged girls or any young, pregnant women who went for four prenatal visits and one postnatal visit, which I included at the suggestion of Dr. C. Everett Koop, the former Surgeon General.

I commented in my floor statement that I did so with some reservations. Why should you have to pay a pregnant woman to go for prenatal care? But, if that is what it takes, I was prepared to advocate that and talk about it to help the young, pregnant woman, to help the child-to-be, and let us discuss it.

The interruption by Senator SARBANES, I think, is always a good idea. You wonder sometimes on the Senate floor when we talk, and we feel like we are in a sound chamber because nobody is here to talk back, you wonder if anybody is listening. Sometimes the Presiding Officer is deep in reading material. This Presiding Officer is very attentive. I thank the Chair.

But I ask my colleague if we may, without objection, have just a brief discussion about the view of the distinguished Senator from Maryland on the need to move ahead. The question is, Is it really necessary for the Senate to await a bill to come from the administration before taking up the issue of health care reform?

Mr. SARBANES. It is a good question. I know the Senator has been addressing that issue. It is very important in trying to move any complex legislation through the Congress to know where the administration is and in particular to know what their proposal may be since the department and the President have a lot of backing.

As I understand it, it is the President's intention to submit something to the Congress in the month of May. We, of course, will not be here for a good part of the month of April. And it is a course that I certainly find acceptable. We should see the administration's proposal, and evaluate it in the light of other proposals which have also been made. The Senator is not the only one who has offered proposals, of course; this is an issue we have been wrestling with for some time, and out of these proposals we will be able to create a plan.

I expect this issue is going to take a fair amount of time to work it out. It is very complex. There are many pieces to the health care puzzle, and people have very differing views about them. But in any event, it seems to me that it is fairly clear that we are moving in a sensible manner on health care. Now we are currently considering the stimulus package, which, I regret to say, apparently will go over into next week. I strongly support this stimulus package. Shortly, I hope to have an opportunity to speak to that point.

But I think we are moving in a sensible way on the health care issue. I think it is very important to get the recommendations or the proposals of the new administration. Those proposals obviously have some impact and we ought to be able to take a look at them and then look at them in the broader context of other proposals, including the proposals which the able Senator from Pennsylvania has advanced on occasion.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my colleague from Maryland for those comments. I know they are thoughtful comments. I say with all respect that I disagree with those comments. The reason I disagree with that conclusion is that I believe the Senate or the House, either is competent to initiate health care reform.

I quite agree with the distinguished Senator from Maryland when he comments that my legislation is not the only legislation in the field. There is tremendous legislation in the field. I have studied the legislation before introducing Senate bill 18. Then I went over the legislation on this side of the aisle and I went over the legislation on that side of the aisle to try to keep it within the Republican ranks. That may well be a mistake because I do not think that the issue of health care reform is partisan in any way, but we seem to have divided up with this large aisle as a separation point.

Then I put in S. 631, which is a composite of five Senators' activities and the views of this Senator. I am not saying that I have the final word. In fact, I am saying I do not have the final word. It is going to require some analysis. But I am concerned when we talk about the May 1 date for Mrs. Clinton to produce legislation, then a referral to hearings, then to be caught up in the complexities of the appropriations legislation, which will come up in the summer and in September, as to whether this legislation is going to be finished.

That is why I pressed it last July 29, 1992, and that is why I pressed it on January 21, 1993. That is why I am looking for an opportunity to press it now.

I do not have any intention of bringing this bill to the floor during the supplemental appropriations. I think the supplemental appropriations is a very important bill. I think when you talk about financing unemployment compensation, it has to be done for those where it has been cut off. I think it is unconscionable not to do that. I disagree with the provision of the authorizing legislation not to pay for it. I said so on the Senate floor. I voted for the bill because I think it is important enough to vote for even though we are not paying for it, which, again I say, is not my privilege. There may again be an amendment to offer to strike out the emergency provision. I think we ought to pay for this bill. I do not think we ought to treat it as an emergency. I think we ought to pay for it. But there are many provisions of this legislation which I think are very, very important.

And I have no doubt that if I were to offer this health bill, that it would fail, this legislation on the appropriations bill, including tax provisions, will fall along party lines. I do not need to give extra reasons to defeat this legislation. But when I saw there was time on the Senate floor this morning, I decided to come over and talk about this bill.

I said to Senator BYRD in advance that I was not going to offer it, that I was going to talk about it. He said, "Well, if you are just going to talk about it, I do not suppose I will say anything." I said, "Well, maybe I will offer it." He said, "If you offer it, I will have quite a lot to say." It is tempting, but I am not going to offer it, at least today. I do not think I will offer it next week when the matter comes up. But I am giving serious consideration to offering it on the debt extension. I said that on the floor 2 days ago when the majority leader was here. That is a tax bill where this kind of legislation can be considered, and considered appropriately.

Mr. President, I know Senator SARBANES is on the floor and ready to speak, and I have spoken for more than the additional 10 minutes requested by my colleague from Iowa.

So rather than take any more time at this point, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of S. 631 be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I will conclude by again "pressing," in the words of Senator BYRD, that we ought to stay here and vote on Fridays and Saturdays and Mondays, and that I would yield to preference on the stimulus package—although I hope we can pay for it. But right behind the stimulus package, after we finish the budget resolution, it would be my preference to take up health care reform. We have a critical mass to address, and we have the collective wisdom in the House and Senate. Washington is not a one-man, one-woman, one-person town. We have 535 of the rest of us in the legislative branch who can act. This Senator intends to continue to press the issue.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Title I: Implements a series of small business insurance market reforms and extend 100 percent deductibility for health the cost of health insurance to self-employed individuals and their families ($1.7 billion in fiscal year 1994, $8.6 billion over 5 years). The market reforms are consistent with those included in the Republican Health Care Task Force bill of the last Congress and include:

Titles II-VII focus on expanding primary and preventive health services and providers and enhancing the management of health care costs. These titles would implement the following reforms:

Title II: Expand primary and preventive health services by authorizing two new grant programs. The first would increase the availability of comprehensive prenatal care services to women at risk for low birthweight births (fiscal year 1994, $100 million). The second would assist local education agencies and pre-school programs in providing comprehensive health education (fiscal year 1994, $90 million). Title II also increases the authorization of several existing preventive health programs, such as Breast and Cervical Prevention, Childhood Immunizations, and Community Health Centers ($1.4 billion over existing authorizations);

Title III: Enhance consumer decision-making by requiring that health care institutions and providers make certain information available to patients;

Title IV: Reduce the delivery of unwanted and unnecessary care in the last months of life by strengthening the federal law regarding patient self-determination and establishing uniform federal forms with regard to self-determination;

COMPREHENSIVE ACCESS AND AFFORDABILITY HEALTH CARE ACT OF 1993 (S. 631)

This summary is organized by topic and does not necessarily coincide with the Title number in the bill text.

I. MANAGED COMPETITION/UNIVERSAL COVERAGE

Establish a Federal Health Board to develop a uniform set of effective benefits, with an emphasis on primary and preventive care.

To contain costs, the Board would determine annual limits on the allowable percentage rate of increase in premiums for Accountable Health Plans (AHPs) and develop uniform deductible and cost-sharing requirements. The Board would also develop standardized claims forms and billing procedures, as well as a plan to accelerate electronic billing and computerization of medical records.

The Board will register and develop reporting standards for Accountable Health Plans on data such as cost, utilization, health outcomes, and patient satisfaction. This information would be collected and published annually by the Board and made available to participating health plans and consumers.

All persons will be required to carry a uniform set of effective benefits either through a group or individually. Low-income persons will receive direct public assistance for the cost of such coverage (see Section III below).

All insurers in the health insurance market will be required to offer a uniform set of effective benefits and to accept its conditions as identified by the Federal Health Board.

States would establish one or more Health Plan Purchasing Cooperatives (HPPCs) to serve as collective purchasing agents for small businesses and individuals. These HPPCs would contract with a range of competing health plans and would present the full range of plans to their customers. The HPPC would provide consumers with information about the plans prior to enrollment periods, including a "report card" measuring performance based on cost, quality and patient satisfaction information collected by the Board. The HPPCs would also manage the enrollment process. Individual consumers would choose a plan for one year and could subsequently change plans during an annual "open season." States could opt to purchase coverage for Medicaid beneficiaries through the purchasing cooperatives. Federal grant funding would be provided to cover States' costs in establishing and administering the HPPCs.

Insurers would enter into arrangements with providers to form Accountable Health Plans (AHPs) which would each offer the uniform set of effective benefits established by the Board and would compete on the basis of price and quality of care. Plans could offer "supplemental" coverage for additional services. Plans would have to take all applicants and could not exclude participants on the basis of preexisting conditions. All plans would be guaranteed renewable. Premiums could vary according to the plan, but would be the same for all members of the purchasing cooperative, regardless of age, sex or health experience. State mandated benefit and anti-managed care laws would be preempted.

II. PREVENTIVE CARE

Expand primary and preventive health services by authorizing increased availability of comprehensive prenatal care services of women at risk for low birthweight births and assistance to local education agencies and pre-school programs in providing comprehensive health education. Increase authorization of several existing preventive health programs, such as Breast and Cervical Cancer Prevention, Childhood Immunizations, and Community Health Centers ($1.4 billion over existing authorizations).

Improve efficiency in health care delivery by permitting access to the most appropriate providers by increasing primary care providers, including generalist physicians, nurse practitioners and physician assistants.

Clarify that expenditures for health promotion and prevention programs are considered amounts paid for medical care for tax purposes.

Establish a new grant program for states to provide assistance to small businesses to establish and operate worksite wellness programs for their employees.

III. ACCESS TO HEALTH CARE

Refundable tax credit to low and middle-income individuals without employer-provided insurance. The amount of the refundable tax credit would be linked to the amount of the lowest-cost Accountable Health Plan in the region.

Self-employed persons and individuals without employer provided insurance who are ineligible for the tax credit could deduct the full 100 percent of the costs of the lowest-priced Accountable Health Plan available.

Employers could only deduct benefit costs up to the level of the lowest-cost Accountable Health Plan in the region. Employer-provided benefits in excess of that capped amount named be taxed as income.

Children's Health Care. To make health insurance available to children under 18 through their elementary and secondary schools. Directs the Secretary of Education to establish this new program for children not eligible for Medicaid and would be basic coverage through their school system. The Secretary of HHS would design a minimum package that each plan would have to cover.

Establishes a refundable tax credit for the purchase of health insurance for children to be worth up to $1,000 per qualifying child for families with incomes below 100 percent of poverty, and phased for families with incomes between 100 to 200 percent of poverty.

Requires the creation of a uniform application form and process for the Special Supplemental Food Program, the Maternal and Child Health Program, and Medicaid.

Improved Access to Health Care for Rural and Underserved Areas. This title would increase scholarship and loan repayment opportunities to help relieve the critical shortage of health care practitioners in rural areas. It would also provide a special tax credit and other incentives for physicians and other primary care providers serving in rural areas.

IV. CONSUMER DECISION MAKING

Enhance consumer decision-making by requiring that providers participating in the Medicare and Medicaid programs make information available to patients of the cost, quality, and options of available health care.

V. COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS BETWEEN HOSPITALS

Provides a waiver from anti-trust laws for hospitals wishing to enter into voluntary cooperative agreements for the sharing of medical technology and services to contain costs by eliminating the unnecessary duplication of services and equipment.

VI. PATIENT'S RIGHT TO DECLINE MEDICAL TREATMENT

Reduce the delivery of unwanted and unnecessary care in the last months of life by strengthening the federal law regarding patient self-determination and establishing uniform federal forms with regard to self-determination.

VII. INSURANCE SIMPLIFICATION AND PORTABILITY

Establish a Health Insurance Standards Commission to develop a long-term plan for the implementation of uniform standards for electronic data interchange for qualified health insurance. The Commission would determine the effectiveness and efficiency of the current health insurance claims billing system and would develop a uniform computerized billing process.

VIII. MALPRACTICE REFORM

Encourage states to establish alternative dispute resolution mechanisms like prelitigation screening panels, which have had great success in a number of states in reducing medical malpractice costs.

IX. MEDICARE PREFERRED PROVIDER DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Expand access to Medicare beneficiaries to managed care programs through the formation of innovative managed care plans.

X. TREATMENT AND OUTCOME RESEARCH

Foster the development of medical practice guidelines by implementing a surcharge of one tenth of one cent on health insurance contracts to expand research on effective medical treatments and treats such guidelines as a legal standard.

XI. LONG-TERM CARE

Increase access to and affordability of appropriate long-term care by: (1) creating tax credits for the purchase of long-term insurance and tax deductions for amounts paid towards long-term care services of family members; (2) excluding life insurance and

IRA savings used to pay for long-term care for income tax; (3) implementing an "extraordinary cost protection provision" by expanding Medicaid to include coverage of any individual, excluding the wealthiest Americans, who has been confined to a nursing home for at least 30 months; and (4) setting standards that require long-term care to eliminate the current bias that favors institutional care over community and home-based alternatives.

XII. FINANCING

Lift the current $130,200 cap on wages subject to the Medicare health insurance tax.

Employers could only deduct benefit costs up to the level of the lowest cost Accountable Health Plan available through the regional purchasing cooperative. (Identified in Section III)

Employer-provided benefits in excess of that capped amount would be taxed as income. (Identified in Section III)

Ms. MIKULSKI addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] is recognized.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise as an enthusiastic, unabashed, and passionate supporter of the President's economic stimulus package.

It is beyond this Senator's logical analysis as to why we are not moving on this in an expeditious way. First, here is a message to the Government of the United States by the people of the United States: Get it moving. We want jobs today, and we want jobs tomorrow. We want to reform our health care system and make sure health care is available to the American people. And when you are spending American taxpayers' dollars, let us give help to those who practice self-help.

That is what is in the President's economic stimulus package. And they say do it, do it now, and do not delay or engage in gridlock. That is the message.

I am somewhat surprised at what my own colleagues of my own party are doing. We have a Democratic President of the United States, who was elected with a mandate for change. This Senator was blessed by a vote from the people of Maryland that gave me a 70-percent vote, and that gave me the mandate to support him for a change, and I will do it.

Why there are those who feel they want to act like a trade association, where they are only interested in what the groups say and what does this mean for the election, I do not know. We have to get ready for the next century. The stimulus package is a tool, and the tool is to generate those jobs today and jobs tomorrow. It does those things.

The other thing is, for those who talk about deficit reduction, growth is one of the most important tools for deficit reduction. Every 1 percent of the unemployment in this country costs us $28 billion in Federal expenditures and the loss in Federal income. One percent of unemployment is $28 billion. The more we grow, the more that helps deal with the Federal deficit. These are wise, targeted, specific uses of the Federal dollars.

Let me talk about this as an appropriator. I have the great honor to chair a subcommittee that funds the American veterans' programs, the housing programs for the United States of America, NASA, our space program, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the National Science Foundation. And in here is a significant effort for the President's stimulus package, but it meets a higher purpose.

Let me tell you what happens. First of all, for the Department of Veterans Affairs alone, the President's request is for $236 million. Guess what that will do? It will mean that 171 VA hospitals and 6 VA cemeteries will have a significant backlog of projects and infrastructure maintenance and repair that will be done. We are going to repair equipment. We are going to remove asbestos and lead. We are going to fix leaky roofs. We are going to repair leaky boilers. We are going to make sure the air conditioning works in a VA hospital.

What does that mean? It means that promises made to America's veterans will be promises kept, because they will have VA facilities, medical facilities, fit for duty, and at the same time it will provide over 4,000 jobs.

Then we take a look at the issue in EPA. Everybody wants to clean up the environment, but what this will do is we are focusing on sewer and water projects.

You know, it is not glamorous to talk about sewer and water. It will not get me an interview with Barbara Walters on TV. Diane Sawyer is not going to come in from "Prime Time Live" and say: Senator MIKULSKI, you are the dean of the women in the Senate; let us talk about the sewer projects and what they mean for America.

But I love talking about sewer projects. Why? First of all, it accomplishes an important public health objective. Any expert in public health will tell you that clean water, adequate sewer systems, are absolutely crucial to the containment of disease in our society and important to our health.

When you drink clean water and you have that necessary infrastructure, you are not going to end up in emergency rooms with infectious diseases. It generates jobs in actually building sewer and water projects. And in the process of building those sewer and water projects, we also lay the foundation for homes, communities, and others to be sustained. So, for me, water and sewer projects are part of accomplishing that "jobs today." They have an impact on public health.

The other part that is crucial here is that we are talking about funding the American space program. This will be absolutely crucial here, because this will help, again, not only generating jobs today but jobs tomorrow.

Then, over there in HUD, Housing and Urban Development, we, again, are going to do things to help our homeless. We are going to target deinstitutionalized individuals and, no, we are not going to do shelters. I appreciate every man and woman that has volunteered to do work in shelters. But shelters are Band-Aids. What we have here is the answer to stop the problem. We are going to provide supportive permanent housing and services to the homeless. We are going to target the deinstitutionalized, and particularly focus on those with emotional problems, and families with children; and we estimate that this is going to generate 11,000 jobs.

Then let me go to those who say we are Government spending. Well, this is giving help to those who practice self-help, who pull up their socks, get up there and go to work. We are also going to help with the President's national service idea, and the fact that if you put sweat equity into your own community, you get some type of reward for it.

We are going to come up with $15 million for a summer program that will have our boys and girls involved in community service, actually learning about their community, learning the habits of the heart, and learning those specific skills of showing up on time, respect for your elders, doing a job that you have been told to do, and learning those work ethic skills that are so crucial to our society. For $15 million, we are going to provide $1,000 summer jobs, but they are not going to be just out there kids raking leaves. They are going to learn about themselves. They are going to learn about their community. They are going to help their community, and they are going to help themselves. I think they are going to be a lot better when they go back to school because of the habits and disciplines they learned.

So this is an appropriator who does have an interest in the stimulus package. I just wanted to outline why this was important. We have a mandate for change. We have a mandate to do it now, and what we will accomplish by spending the money in the stimulus package is helping with deficit reduction, but most of all, by acting in a prompt, timely way, we need to restore the confidence in the American people that gridlock is not back.

I say to the Members of my own party, for those of us who campaigned against gridlock, deadlock, stagnation, how can they then engage in those practices to do it? If they have amendments let us offer them. If they want to debate them, let us debate them. But let us not do parliamentary shenanigans to slow this down.

Mr. President, I note that my very distinguished senior Senator, the chairman of the Joint Economics Committee, a member of the Budget Committee, who chaired the Subcommittee on Housing authorization is on the floor. I think I have made my points around what I think this means. I hope my colleagues on both sides of the wall—maybe that is what it has become—both sides of the aisle will now support the President and move this stimulus package. America wants it. I see no reason why the U.S. Senate does not.

IMMUNIZATION FACTS

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I support the President's stimulus especially on the immunization package.

We know immunizations work.

For every $1 invested in immunizations, $10 are saved in later medical costs.

If administered to children on schedule, vaccines are effective in preventing nine major childhood diseases: diphtheria, measles, mumps, pertussis, polio, rubella and congenital rubella syndrome, tetanus, hepatitis B, and hemophilus influenza type B.

The occurrence of the first seven of these diseases has been reduced 90 percent or more from their peak levels in this century. We know immunizations work.

Before the Salk vaccine, polio afflicted thousands of children, 21,000 in 1954. By 1964, the disease was virtually wiped out.

At the time the measles vaccine was licensed in 1963, an average of 500,000 to 1 million cases were reported annually.

Diphtheria dropped from a peak of 207,000 cases in 1922 to 4 cases in 1990.

Pertussis dropped from 265,269 cases in 1934 to 4,570 in 1990.

Rubella cases fell from 57,690 in 1969 to 1,125 in 1990.

SERIOUS PROBLEMS EXIST IN OUR SYSTEM

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimate that only 40 to 50 percent of 2-year-olds are appropriately immunized. Rates run as low as 12 percent in some areas.

Recently, this country has seen an outbreak of whooping cough with double the number of cases this year than in all of 1992.

Cases of measles increased from 1,500 in 1983 to 27,700 in 1990. Cases of rubella and pertussis also increased.

Measles cases jumped from an all-time low of 1,500 cases in 1983 to 18,000 cases and 41 deaths in 1989 and 27,700 cases and 89 deaths in 1990—the highest in 19 years.

Among Western Hemisphere countries, only Haiti and Bolivia have worse immunization rates than the United States for children 2 years old or younger.

THE COSTS OF NOT TAKING ACTION ARE HIGH

Immunizations could help conserve precious health dollars that could be spent on other health care needs.

Hospital charges for children admitted to 46 children's hospitals in 1988 averaged $3,761 per child.

IT'S TIME TO TAKE ACTION NOW

The President has joined efforts with Healthy People 2000, a nationwide effort spearheaded by the U.S. Public Health Service, to reach a goal of a 90-percent immunization rate for all 2-year-olds by the year 2000.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before she yields the floor?

Mr. MIKULSKI. I am happy to yield to the chairman.

Mr. BYRD. I thank Senator MIKULSKI for her moving speech. She talks about the work ethic. We should all think a little about applying the work ethic to ourselves. How many Senators are around here? Do not guarantee Senators that there will not be a vote. Do not guarantee Senators there will not be a vote here today. It is the Chair's duty to put the question. If no Senator rises, it is the Chair's duty to put the question. The question is on the pending amendment.

This Senator is not part of the syndrome of leaving early on Friday, not being in on Saturday, being out Monday and having the first votes on Tuesday afternoon.

Let us have a vote. If no Senator wants to call up an amendment, let us have a vote on the pending amendment, and vote it up or down.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Maryland. She is my Joan of Arc.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, a point of order.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has been waiting for a period of time.

Mr. BYRD. It doesn't matter how long a Senator is waiting. It is the first Senator who seeks recognition.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I think that the Senator from West Virginia has answered the point of parliamentary, but it would be to you I thought that I said "Mr. President" first and I thought you were looking in this direction first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that is the case, then the Senator is recognized.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I cannot dictate to the Chair. I appreciate the Chair recognizing me.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GRASSLEY. I yield for a question. Does the Senator want to ask me a question?

Mr. SARBANES. Exactly.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I will yield for a question, yes.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator indicate how long he intends to be because I was waiting for quite some time to speak? I understand the Senator has now gained recognition, but I would like to be able to address this matter for a while.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I would like to speak for approximately 30 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I think before I refer specifically to the bill before us and the issue before us, I want to make a commentary on where the junior Senator from Maryland left off.

She asked us to support the President. I think that that is a worthy request because I think a President should be supported as a general proposition. He is the only nationally elected officer in our Constitution. He speaks for a national constituency where we speak for the constituencies within our own State.

Also coming up against the proposition that we have a national leader is the proposition that we do have separation of powers and we do have the checks and balances. I want to say that, and maybe I took too much pride in this when we had Republican Presidents of making a point that I am not the President's man, and I know the Senator from West Virginia has also made that point about his own relationship with the White House when we have had a Democrat President.

So I do not think I am saying anything new here, except I think I would like to remind my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that I saw my job as a U.S. Senator as a Republican from the State of Iowa during 12 years of a Republican Presidency to not be a rubber stamp for a Republican President, and I think if you carry that into the other point, when we have a Democrat President, I have a responsibility then not to be a stumbling block for a Democrat President.

But that gets you back to the point of where we are under the Constitution for 210 years as Members of this body, elected by our own constituencies with the constitutional powers and constitutional responsibilities to do our job under the Constitution and our responsibility to the Constitution. When that calls for our doing things the way we feel they ought to be done, we should be working with the President and then doing it. When we feel the President is wrong, then we should not just be against the President, whether you are Republican or Democrat. You should not be just against a President.

Now on this side of the aisle, after 12 years of having a Republican President to work with, I hope we are not seen and I hope we are not as just opponents of the President.

I do not think this is an American term, but I like to think of myself in the sense of the opposition in parliament, members of the loyal opposition. When we can work with the President, we work with him. When we disagree with him, we offer alternative responsibilities or alternative programs as we did in the budget process we just went through.

If those are adopted, then obviously it is more to our point of view and we are more inclined to vote for it. If we are opposed to it or if we lose out with our responsible alternatives, maybe we have good justification for voting against it, or it might be just because we offered an alternative we did not get our way. There still might be very good reasons we would support the President of the United States.

But we have to function under the Constitution and to not just carry water as Republicans for a Republican President and not just carry water for a Democrat when we have a Democrat President if we happen to be Members of the Democratic Party in this body.

We have the power of the purse under the Constitution. But most importantly, as this process of Government works, I think if I were in the Democrats' position I think it is perfectly legitimate that you talk about the mandates of the last election, that the people voted for change, but I think the farther you get away from that election the less you are going to be able to use that as a legitimate statement of process in this body.

But even if that happens to be the case, that you feel that there is a mandate, somewhere along the line you have a responsibility as well to reflect other than thoughts on the subject, your own approach to solving problems and just cannot go merrily along the way because you have a President that you are proud of and you want to make him look good.

I can tell you that maybe too many Republicans in 1981 felt that same way toward President Reagan who was elected, and maybe when you look back you will look back and maybe we Republicans would have to say: Maybe there were some mistakes that were made because there was too much blind loyalty to his mandate. That was a stronger mandate percentage-wise than even this President got.

I remember even in the period of time that we Republicans controlled the Senate, it did not keep my friend from Oregon and myself from offering an amendment in 1985 that stopped the Reagan defense buildup, and it was adopted just by a 1-vote margin, 50 to 49.

It was not adopted by a majority of Republicans votes. There were 38 Democrat votes and there were 12 Republican votes. And we would have never got that adopted if there had not been bipartisan cooperation.

Whereas, maybe during that period of time there were people on the other side of the aisle that saw this as an opportunity to get at a Republican President, make him look bad. I hope that was not the case, but it may have been the case.

Maybe you are in the majority today, you have a Democratic President, you look at us as if we are not going along enough, as the junior Senator from Maryland asked us to support the President. But I was thinking in terms of what has happened since this mandate in November.

There is another part of the process of Government that I think we forget about, and that is the constant communication that we are having with our constituents. And things can sometimes change.

We cannot make policy based on polls, but we do sometimes look at polls and you do find support in those polls for the President's program, generally. But you go down in those polls—and you know there are always followup questions and subsidiary issues and questions that come up—and there is still a strong feeling in those polls by the very same people who give strong support to the President that he has a program and it ought to be honored, that we ought to be careful how we spend money, and that there ought to be more cuts before there are more taxes.

It does not bring up specifically the issue that is before us today, but I think you have to say that this can fall into that category.

But, there is a process going on all the time. Since the President has been elected, since we have been deliberating for 60-some days in this body about the various issues, people are always communicating to us by letter, by phone, and in person. They are operating under something that we do not often talk about that is in our Constitution, the first amendment rights. We too often think three of the four: freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and freedom of the press.

We do not very much think about the right to petition your Government for redress of grievances, and that is a process where our constituents are coming to us by different methods to communicate their views.

They have a constitutional right to express those views to us. We have a constitutional responsibility to consider their views. We do not have a constitutional responsibility to do what they ask, just to consider those points of view.

And you want to remember in this process of making representative government work—and that is the essence of representative government—that people are going to be communicating to us their points of view. Somehow that is going to moderate—the further on time goes, the more it is going to moderate—those decisions that we assume soon after an election that are a mandate from the people.

So I hope that we on this side of the aisle are not seen as impeding because we want to make sure that there is a thorough discussion of these issues.

Mr. President, Buckminster Fuller once said:

When I am working on a problem, I never think about beauty. I think only of how to solve the problem. But when I am finished, if the solution is not beautiful, I know it is wrong.

Mr. President, the budget resolution that we passed yesterday, most of us on this side of the aisle—maybe all of us—felt it was not beautiful. We felt it was ugly. Therefore, according to Buckminster Fuller's evaluation, the budget is wrong.

I think to some extent as an extension of the budget process, this $16 billion appropriation bill now before us is a continuation of bad budget policy and a wrong direction for this country.

In my view, the substitute offered by the distinguished Republican leader in the budget deliberations 2 days ago was a beautiful budget; that is, it addressed directly the problems that we face, because it cut spending first, just as America is demanding more all the time. And it would have lowered the deficit beyond 1997, unlike the Clinton budget.

And it would have lowered therefore the long-term debt. The Republican substitute which by the way—I was going to say, which by the way got some Democrat votes, but I am not sure of that, so I better not say that.

The Republican substitute showed that there are alternatives to the deficit reduction without having to raise taxes. The choices are, therefore, clear and distinct.

This stimulus package, this appropriation bill, like the budget that preceded it, is at total variance with what America has asked us to do because it raises the debt. Americans want that debt down. It is not paid for. They think we ought to pay more as we go along.

(Mrs. MURRAY assumed the chair.)

Mr. GRASSLEY. All throughout the budget debate, I heard my friends on the other side talk about how we need to pay our bills. That was their justification for the largest tax increase in the history of our country. Now that is out of the way. And out of the other side of our mouths, we are now increasing spending without offsetting it.

This is very definitely a defining moment, Madam President. The budget of the United States is the most important statement of an administration's policy. The budget we just passed, together with this stimulus bill, speaks loudly and clearly as to where this country is headed under this new administration.

Today, Madam President, is March 26, 1993. Would that someone had just awakened after a 17-year sleep, he or she might pick up the morning paper, read about a $16 billion stimulus package, and think we are still in the Carter administration. This could easily be March 26, 1977. It is deja vu.

In that respect, this approach to budgeting—that is, deficit spending—is anachronistic. It is obsolete. It is devoid of new direction. The rhetoric is new: It is called investment instead of spending. But only the packaging is new. The direction is not.

This is, as in 1977, a new administration's tax-and-spend way of conducting the fiscal affairs of our country. Pure and simple. That is why I call it deja voodoo. We just passed simultaneously the largest tax increase ever, the largest spending increase ever, and the highest debt amount ever. Taxes will go up by $300 billion, new spending will go up by $124 billion, and the debt will go up by $1.8 trillion over a 5-year period of time.

And now we are going to add another $16 billion to the debt because we are not paying the bill.

If ever there was a way of doing business that is worthy of the moniker business as usual, surely this is it.

Let me suggest, Madam President, why this approach will fail. The fact of the matter is, we simply do not have the money to increase spending. The debt is rising so rapidly that it is about to explode.

It was important that the budget we just passed fulfills the President's pledge to reinvent government. Reinventing government is needed because we need to find ways to get better performance with fewer dollars.

Members of this body, I say to the new Senator from Washington, have heard me say that for about 8 or 9 years in regard to defense. There has to be changes in the way the defense dollars are spent even if they are less, you have to change the way the Defense Department does business if you are going to get more for the taxpayers' dollars. And there are a lot of studies that show in procurement one-third of the procurement dollar in defense is wasted. Now we are spending less on defense.

I do not know whether we made enough changes there so that defense department is going to be more figuratively changed. I think that is a lifetime job, to make sure those changes go on.

But here we are spending more money on the same programs on the domestic side of the ledger and we have not reinvented Government before we spend a massive more amount of money on those programs.

Reinventing government is something I believe in, but it is also something that the President has made a centerpiece of his program. It was the centerpiece of his election. And he ought to take those steps of reinventing government before we pour more money into these programs. I say that in the same vein—I would have made those very same statements to a President Reagan or a President Bush during the last several years. The status quo is not working and it is costing us a fortune.

How does passing this bill help us do that? The answer is that it does not. Not only does it inhibit our ability to reinvent government; the more we spend, the more debt we accrue and the less incentive we have to reinvent government.

The changes were not made in the Defense Department in 1981. We just poured so much money at that Pentagon that one Assistant Secretary a couple of years later described it this way, and I will paraphrase from something that was in the newspapers. He said: "We just brought the money bags to the steps of the Pentagon and opened them and said to the military-industrial complex, 'Come and get it.'" And we saw that happened.

I do not want to say on the domestic side of the ledger it is exactly the same way or as bad. I cannot say that. But the President himself has acknowledged a necessity for changing programs, modernizing them, maybe doing away with some, maybe even adopting some new ones. But he says we should reinvent. We are not doing it.

This is a dangerous road we are heading down. I congratulate my colleagues on this side of the aisle for their energy and efforts to educate the American people these past weeks, about the perils of the budget we just passed, and of deficit spending, as we are doing on this bill.

We stripped away the false advertising that portrayed this plan as representing change, because there is no change. We exposed this plan as a platform for raising taxes. That is what the budget is that we just passed. We exposed the fact that this Congress, both with the budget and now this bill, failed to make the President live up to his campaign promises on cutting spending, cutting the deficit and cutting taxes for the middle class. He broke each of these pledges.

Madam President, America's eyes are now open to the reality—the truth—of this plan. They are getting bigger government, not reinvented government. In the months ahead, the choices will continue to be bigger government versus reinvented government.

I think in our oversight capacity we have every right to measure the President by his statements that he wanted to reinvent government, the extent to which government is being reinvented.

But we continue toward tax-and-spend budgets versus budget freezes, with proposals for a more effective government; between bills that increase the deficit versus bills offset with spending cuts.

These are two diverse visions for the American people. Many of us, even on this side of the aisle, stood ready to help a new President who promised change and innovation in government, who promised to lower the deficit. Instead, the President and this Congress have chosen the status quo. The lines have become clearly drawn.

We hear the phrase "guardians of gridlock" again and again from the other side. Let me suggest that what we are opposing here on this side of the aisle is the "deja voodoo" we are getting from the other side. We are opposed to deja voodoo. This is Jimmy Carter all over again. Only in Bill Clinton clothing. This is old Democrat policy in new Democrat rhetoric. And this is not what America wants.

We are not the guardians of gridlock. We are the guardians of good government. We are the protectors of the people. We are helping the President keep the promises he made to the American people. Because the President did not keep his own promises, and the majority party in the Congress did not hold his feet to the fire.

The way I think—whether we have a Republican or Democrat President—we have a responsibility through the checks and balances of the Constitution to hold to the fire the feet of any President of any party.

Performance in office should be commensurate with the rhetoric of the campaign and the mandate that comes through that campaign.

The American people did not give Candidate Clinton 43 percent of their vote to get higher deficits, higher spending, and higher taxes. It was the opposite. They voted for lower deficits, lower spending, and lower taxes. That is what they were promised. But it is not being delivered. This side of the aisle is trying to deliver on those promises.

Mr. President, I returned to the Senate this year for a new term. And I returned with a mandate. Seventy-two percent of the voters in Iowa reelected me to lower the deficit and continue my role as the guardian of good government. During my campaign, the issue of deficit spending came up repeatedly. My opponent constantly attacked me for opposing spending on various programs, similar to what we are doing on this bill. And constantly I responded that the most important thing we can do for our children—for our children born, our children unborn, and our grandchildren unborn—is to put our fiscal house in order first. That is the program for children.

The program that is against children is when we load more debt on their backs so we can live high on the hog during our generation. We have a responsibility, each generation, except for time of war when the very existence of our Government and our society is at stake, to pay our own fair share.

If we do not have the money, we do not have the money. If we spend money in one place, we need to cut spending in another. This is the way business does it, the way our families do it, and the way we should do it. That is what my Republican colleagues are saying. In other words, they are saying we want change—real change. We want good government.

Madam President, the Democrats have control of the Government. Therefore, they have the opportunity, a rare opportunity, to deliver for the American people. And they have the moral authority to deliver because they promised to deliver. But they did not promise to raise the debt. They did not promise to increase spending. They did not promise to raise taxes. They promised restraint on all counts. And so the moral authority, Mr. President, has fallen to this party. This side of the aisle. We are trying to deliver what the American people were promised last year. That is why we albeit in the minority, are the guardians of good government not the guardians of gridlock. The other party has dropped the ball.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Chair. Madam President, I rise in very strong support of the legislation which the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and our former majority leader has brought to the floor of the Senate. This legislation, the so-called stimulus program, is very important for the economy of our country, and I very strongly stand behind it. The President strongly stands behind it. In fact, the President, as I understand it, sent a letter to the chairman indicating his very strong support for this measure which has been reported out from the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, the Senator is correct, and that letter is in the RECORD of yesterday.

Mr. SARBANES. I appreciate that. The House of Representatives has acted on the stimulus package. It is the one remaining major piece of the economic proposals submitted to us by the President that needs to be enacted in the Senate. I very strongly urge its passage.

Now, Madam President, we have to break the gridlock. We cannot have the guardians of gridlock reemerging now and, in effect, seeking to tie the country up again. The President put together a balanced program. He has an investment strategy, he has a deficit reduction strategy, and he has a stimulus strategy.

The President said the other night, when Dan Rather interviewed him at the White House, that he was trying to accomplish not one goal but a number of goals, which is of course what you have to do when you are dealing with economic matters. He is trying to get the economy moving, to get some momentum to the economy to restore jobs and to get economic growth, and the stimulus proposal that is here before us is an essential element in achieving that goal.

Looking further out into the future, he is trying to get significant deficit reduction to bring down the deficit which has been rising over this last decade, to restrain it, to start its downward movement and its eventual elimination and also to make some investments in the future strength of our economy.

The stimulus in the short run represents some of that investment strategy here and now. The budget resolution reflects an investment strategy in the next fiscal year and beyond. So we are trying to get the deficit down, and we want to get the economy growing. Getting the economy growing is essential to reducing the deficit because in a weak, anemic, stagnant economy, the deficit, in fact, will go up, not down. Every 1 percent on the unemployment rate is $50 billion on the deficit.

The President wants to do an investment strategy in research and development, in the education and training of our people, in improving the health of our people, in infrastructure, the Nation's transportation network, in encouraging investment in new plant and equipment. The economic stimulus package embraces this supplemental and it also embraces in the reconciliation bill certain tax measures to encourage investment in the private sector.

All of this, is designed to lead to lasting economic growth and rising standards of living for all Americans. To accomplish this, the President is seeking to reduce the deficit, which drains our economic strength. President Carter wrestled with a $40 billion, $50 billion deficit. I can still remember it. Now the deficit is in excess of $300 billion. That is what the Bush administration left on Mr. Clinton's doorstep. Mr. Clinton did not create it. It was left to him by the Bush administration when he came into office.

At the same time the President is seeking to reduce the deficit, he wants to invest in the public and private capital—education, training, nutrition, preventive health care, research, infrastructure and new factories, and equipment which we need in order for the economy to grow.

To accomplish this, the President is trying to put together an integrated program that has three parts: A short-term stimulus; medium- and long-term investment; and deficit reduction.

Let me just address the stimulus because that is the issue that is before us with this appropriations bill.

Why do we need it? Some come out here and say, "We do not need the stimulus; we do not want to have this stimulus program." First of all, let me just point out, this is not a strong economy and we ought not to run the risk of the economy taking a nose dive and bringing a triple-dip recession.

We have not come out of this recession in any way like we did in previous recessions. This chart shows the growth of real gross domestic product following postwar recessions. The growth in this recovery period is well below what we experienced in previous recovery periods coming out of a recession. This is not a strong, vibrant recovery. In fact, the unemployment rate today is higher than it was at the bottom of the recession which occurred 22 months ago. We have had significantly less growth in this recovery compared with the average growth in previous recoveries.

In addition the unemployment rate today is higher than it was at the trough of the recession. We have never experienced that in any previous postwar recession. In none of the previous postwar recessions was the unemployment rate, 22 months after the bottom of the recession, still higher than it had been in the trough. Usually the unemployment rate improves in the 6- to 9-month period after the bottom and as we start the recovery, things start looking better, people go back to work and the economy starts moving again.

The corollary of this failure to have strong economic growth is reflected in this chart which shows the lack of jobs recovered in this recession recovery cycle, compared with the average of postwar recession recoveries. As you can see, in other postwar recessions, we recovered all the jobs that had been lost and then many more. We have not done that during this recession, according to the official figures given us by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

So this is not a strong recovery. The growth number that people talked about, 4.7 percent in the last quarter, is only about half the pace of the typical recovery. A known forecaster is not predicting the growth in this quarter will be equal to what it was in the last quarter of last year. They expect it to be lower.

The last quarter of last year was fueled in part by a good export performance. But Germany, Japan, and the European countries are experiencing economic difficulties. We do not expect to have the same demand from foreign countries for American exports. Consumer spending in the last quarter of 1992 outran consumer income and people were taking out of savings or borrowing in order to make their consumer expenditures. They obviously cannot go on doing that indefinitely.

So we really have a problem that this economy may stall out again. The stimulus program is designed to prevent that from happening and is particularly designed to address certain very pressing problems.

Madam President, this chart shows the percent of the long-term unem-played as a percent of the total people unemployed. What this shows is that in previous recoveries, the number of long-term unemployed individuals goes up and then as the economy recovers you start to recover the jobs lost during the recession. People go back to work, and the unemployment rate drops down. That has not happened in this recovery.

A significant part of the money in this economic stimulus package is designed to extend the unemployment insurance system benefits in order that the long-term unemployed are not going to simply find themselves completely cut off and literally falling off the edge of the world, without this extension people may—loss their homes, their cars, and their well being.

The President is trying to give the economy a boost. It is almost like a plane taking off. It starts to gain some lift and some momentum. What lies ahead of it is a major deficit reduction program. When that attaches itself to the economy, it is going to be, contractionary in the short run. It is going to put pressure on the economy in a contractionary direction. We need to be sure that the economy has enough lift to it that as the deficit reduction attaches to it, it will not precipitate it into an economic nose dive.

That is what the President's stimulus program is designed to do. It is designed to carry the economy on up so it can handle the deficit reduction and handle the investment strategy. If we go into a triple-dip recession, we are going to have a jobs problem, an economic growth problem, an investment deficit problem, and a budget deficit. So actually this stimulus package, which will increase economic growth and create jobs, will make its contribution to deficit reduction, through a stronger economy.

Mr. SASSER. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. SARBANES. I am happy to yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. The distinguished Senator from Maryland is learned in economics, has compiled a brilliant record really as chairman of the Joint Economic Committee here in the Congress. He is very familiar with these terms that economists use such as "stimulus," "recession," et cetera. But I will ask my friend from Maryland, when he is talking about an economic stimulus, is that not roughly equivalent to what we used to call a jobs bill here in the Congress? In this particular stimulus package that the President is advancing, the principal thrust is to create jobs, is it not, I will ask my friend from Maryland?

Mr. SARBANES. The Senator is absolutely correct, although I think the President, who is a very perceptive and smart leader, has added an extra dimension in this instance with respect to this stimulus package. What he has done is put together both job restoration and creation, and integrated this into his investment strategy for the future of the country.

So what he is talking about is doing things like highway investment. This is not leaf raking. We are going to have highway investment. We are going to create jobs, and we are going to be left with an improved highway network. He is doing the same thing for mass transit and airport improvements. He invests in youth summer jobs, which can do any host of important tasks across the country. He is providing some money for the community development block grant to mayors and Governors to get important infrastructure projects moving. They are enthusiastic for this program.

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator will just yield on that point, in other words, it appears to me that this short-term stimulus—and I will use the term that the economists use, stimulus—is really creating jobs but jobs which will link into the long-term investment strategy.

Mr. SARBANES. That is exactly correct. And it is a very important point that the Senator is making because it shows that the President has a long-term vision. He has the ability, which I admire and respect, to integrate what he seeks to do in the short term with what he is trying to accomplish in the long term. So he is thinking about the future strength of the economy in the long term and at the same time he is trying to address the short-term weaknesses which these weak growth and job restoration figures demonstrate.

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator will yield on that point, I could not agree with the Senator more. I am extraordinarily pleased that this President is exhibiting that kind of long-term vision and coupling it with a short-term strategy to move us ahead over the long term.

Now, one of the criticisms that has been made of our political leadership, and indeed our business leadership in the private sector, over the past 12 to 15 years has been that everybody is looking no further than the next election, as far as the political leadership is concerned. As far as the business leadership is concerned, they are looking no further than the next quarterly dividend.

What we have been confronted with is political leadership and business leadership in other nations where they are looking to the long term, the long-term growth of their economy, the long-term competitiveness of their economy, and the long-term enhancement of the quality of life of their people.

Let us take the Japanese. The Japanese have been the envy of the modern world in recent times, as my friend from Maryland knows better than I. They have done that by taking a long-term investment strategy. That is precisely what this President is doing with this investment package that was folded into the budget resolution that was passed yesterday and with the short-term stimulus package we have before us today, which is creating jobs for our people in the short term but will build the infrastructure, both in the major urban areas and across the country, to allow the economy to improve itself in the long term.

I must say to my friend from Maryland, it is high time we had some leadership at the top level of the executive branch in this Government once again that has a vision which goes beyond just the next election. When you look at the long haul of American history and you see those Presidents who are honored by historians as being great leaders, they shared one thing in common. That was a vision for the country and the ability to look past the next 6 months, to look past the next year, to look past the next election to what is in the long-term best interests of all of our people.

Interestingly enough, many of these leaders came to be known for greatness because they were willing to take extraordinary risks, political risks, for what they deemed to be in the long-term interest of the country.

Well, I am going afield here, but I just wanted to reinforce—

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield, I do not think the Senator is going afield at all. I think the point he is making is actually the overarching perception to this entire discussion. What has to be understood is that President Clinton, had the vision to put together a program that makes sense. But each part of the program is essential to achieving the objectives.

We passed in the budget resolution major deficit reduction and major investment programs. I think most of the American people agree with the strategy. Most Americans want the deficit to come down, and most Americans I think recognize that we need to make some investments for the future economic strength of our country.

If you ask Americans should we educate our children, should we train our work force, should we be doing a better job on research and development in order to compete internationally, should we upgrade our infrastructure—people can see the infrastructure literally crumbling right in front of their eyes all across the country—the answer would be yes. The owner of a small trucking company said to me: If my truck sits in a traffic jam for 3 or 4 hours that is right out of the efficiency of my company. That is right out of my productivity.

So I think Americans want to do the investment strategy. The President says he has this final piece. He said, we need stimulus to get the economy moving so that the deficit reduction does not precipitate an economic downturn.

Bob Solow, a distinguished Nobel Laureate economist said in February of this month testifying before the Joint Economic Committee about a stimulus "There is enough slack in the economy to warrant a more aggressive approach. The payoff would be higher output, more jobs, with little danger that inflationary pressure would return."

Actually, on the inflation front we have a very good performance. We have a slack economy, we have idle workers, and idle plant and equipment. There is every reason to believe that we can have some additional stimulus without affecting the inflation problem, and in fact we had testimony from people from the Federal Reserve to that very effect, that there was enough slack in margin in the economy now in order to do that.

Mr. SASSER. If the Senator will yield for one moment, I was just reflecting on some of the things that have been said here on the floor of the Senate today, in opposition I might say to this stimulus package. We have on the floor of the Senate probably the preeminent historian of the Senate in the world, in the distinguished Senator from West Virginia. But I daresay that if you went back to the early 1930's, if you went back to 1933, and 1934, and 1935, you would have heard the same argument emanating from the other side of the aisle with regard to the stimulus program that the late President Franklin Delano Roosevelt was famous for. And they would say with regard to my section of the country: Oh, all that money he is spending to build those dams for this thing called the Tennessee Valley Authority, he is increasing the deficit to do that, it is nothing but raw political spending.

As one who comes from that area of the country, that stimulus package to build those great hydroelectric dams down there created jobs in the short term so that people could feed their families, so that people could look after the needs of their families, so that people could get adequate medical care once again because at least they had some financial resources to pay for it, they did all that in the short term. But probably the great benefit was in the long term because those hydroelectric dams are still producing electricity to this day. They brought to the Tennessee Valley area an aluminum industry because there was cheap hydroelectric power. That same aluminum industry built the great bombers and fighters, aircraft that won World War II. We heard the same arguments I daresay against that stimulus proposal back in the early thirties.

Why, if you listen to some of these arguments over here, they listened to them in 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, we would still be driving on gravel roads in this country, I say to my friend from Maryland. That is where we would be. We would still be down in my area reading by kerosene lamps at night, if you listened to some of these arguments over here. At long last, once again, there is a leader in this country who says: Yes, we have to do something here in the short term to put our people back to work so that in the long term we can all live a better life. And, oh, yes, when we are all working and paying taxes, and this economy is growing, then we bring down the deficit.

My friend from Maryland—I am impinging on his time. He is more knowledgeable about these economic matters than I am, I must say.

But let us just look at what has occurred with regard to this economy we are in now. We have been in the longest recession for the past few years.

Admittedly it has not been the deepest recession. It was not as deep as the Reagan recession in 1982. But it has been the longest recession.

The economists say we are coming out of this recession. But there is a difference between this economic recovery and the economic recovery since World War II.

And the difference is that this economic recovery, I say to my colleagues, is not creating jobs.

I call the attention of my colleague from Maryland to this chart here. You will note that in the average recession we go back to the trough of the recession in 1991. In a normal recovery we would have created 4 million jobs by this time in the recovery phase. In this particular recovery, recovering from this recession of 1991, and 1992, we have created only 1 million jobs. Only 25 percent of the jobs that would be created in all other recoveries is being created in this one.

That is why, I say to my friend from Maryland, we have to do something about creating jobs. That is what this short-term stimulus is all about.

I am familiar with our budget problems. I am as familiar with our deficit problems as any Member in this body. I studied those numbers. I say to my friends, you cannot lower the deficit appreciably until you get to the jobs. The thing that knocks the bottom out of these budgets is high unemployment numbers, and the thing that explodes these deficits is poor economic performance.

My friend from Maryland knows as well as I, that for every 1 percent the unemployment rate goes up, that is about 1.1 million workers, roughly in that area. It cost the Federal Government about $50 billion.

Mr. SARBANES. That is right, $50 billion on the deficit.

Mr. SASSER. It raises the deficit $50 billion.

Mr. SARBANES. That is right.

Mr. SASSER. That is caused by the fact that these 1.1 percent who are not working are not paying taxes in the Federal Treasury. That is the lion's share of that $50 billion deficit increase. Yes, part of it is increased unemployment compensation for the unemployed, part of it is increased Medicare costs because when they lose their jobs, they become poor and they cannot afford to pay the bills. They lose their medical insurance, if they have any.

So the key to doing something about this deficit is getting this economy going again, getting a robust economy, and trying to move our people into good jobs at good wages. That is what this President promised the American people he was going to do.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SASSER. I am pleased to yield to my friend from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Are not 10 percent of the American people on food stamps today?

Mr. SASSER. No question about it, for the first time in the history of this Nation, 1 out of 10 Americans are on food stamps.

And I say to my friend from West Virginia, we are seeing a different type of person on food stamps now. In other words, those who run these food stamp offices are telling us they are seeing people show up there and apply for them who were formerly at middle-management level positions with great corporations in this country. Because of the layoffs, people who never thought in their lives they would apply for food stamps or public assistance are forced to do it.

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield, the Senator from West Virginia is absolutely right. Here is a story on March 2, in the New York Times: "Food Stamp Users Up Sharply in Sign of Weak Recovery." It says, Figures Top Those of Recession in 1982-1983 and Underscore Hardship of the Poorest.

It goes on to say:

The discouraging numbers on food stamp recipients was the latest in a string of so-so economic reports. And the burst of post-election optimism about the economy, reflected by rising stock prices and a sharp upturn in consumer confidence, has given way to fresh anxiety and new questions about the staying power of the economic expansion.

You have articles saying "key indicators showing economy losing momentum," and "economy behaving like it needs help." These stories are all within the month. Several sets of data suggest slower growth. The President was handed a very tough economic playing field when he came into office. Have no doubts about that. It was a very tough economic playing field. You had an anemic recovery, the weakest in any postwar recovery by far. You had a rising budget deficit, and you had a growing investment deficit in terms of the future economic strength of the country.

And President Clinton, to his credit, has been willing to try to deal with all of those problems in a comprehensive, coordinated way. Now yesterday we passed the budget resolution which set out the path on reducing the budget deficit, and reducing the investment deficit. Now we need to put this piece into place, the stimulus package, to get the economy moving, to restore the jobs and the economic growth that the distinguished Senator from Tennessee has just spoken about so eloquently.

I commend the chairman of the committee for the provisions he put in requiring that these investments be examined very carefully. A lot of political hay was made out of the fact that the President is going to provide some money in community development block grants to help Governors and mayors get things moving at their level, because they have been experiencing a really tight budget situation. A lot of essential needs have gone unmet.

Under the community development block grant, Governors and mayors have a lot of discretion. People have gone around and found instances where that discretion was used for projects that do not really appear very meritorious. If you give discretion out, you are going to have some abuse. Nobody went around and brought in all of the projects that the community development block grants were used for that were obviously meritorious.

The chairman addressed that issue very specifically. The mayors and Governors have assured us that the things they are going to do with this money is essential to the future.

But what we are talking about are programs that invest in our people, programs that invest in our infrastructure, in both rural and urban areas, programs that invest in technology, in the building of the technological base of the country, in the energy field, environment field, in the computer field.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will yield, Madam President, the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Tennessee are making excellent points here. If I may ask a question, we talked about the number of people on food stamps, which is the highest ever. What about the individuals who are on the AFDC Program, Aid to Families With Dependent Children? Today there are 14 million, more than ever before, is that not correct?

Mr. SARBANES. That is correct. To this President's credit, he has indicated that one of his major initiatives that he intends to get to is welfare reform.

Mr. BYRD. What about Medicaid? Today there are over 32 million recipients, the highest ever. What does that do to the deficit? Does that help the deficit? Why are these statistics that we are quoting here the highest ever—food stamps, Medicaid, AFDC—why are they the highest ever?

Mr. SARBANES. It is because we are not recovering from the recession.

Mr. BYRD. Right. People are not working.

Mr. SARBANES. The President is trying to give an impetus to this economy to get us out of this recession.

Mr. BYRD. Right. People are unemployed. We need to do something about unemployment and get people to work. These rolls are costing the American people—welfare rolls, food stamps, Medicaid.

I have one final question of the Senator from Tennessee. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee, was not this jobs program—we will call it the stimulus program for the moment—was it not costed into the overall budget resolution package that the Senate voted on yesterday, which was so masterfully explained and managed on the floor by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee? Was not this so-called stimulus package costed into that and, yet, did not that package say that in 5 years we are going to have a reduction in the budget deficit of $502 billion?

Mr. SASSER. The Senator from West Virginia is entirely correct. Yesterday, when we passed this budget resolution, which contained the largest deficit reduction package in the history of the country, it also included the cost of this stimulus package.

I heard my distinguished friend from West Virginia yesterday talking about the fact that he "already had his spinach." The statement has been made that we ought to "eat our spinach before we have our dessert." The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee said he already had his spinach. Indeed, he did. He got his spinach in this budget resolution that passed yesterday.

As a matter of fact, I would say to my friend from West Virginia, I think what he really got was not spinach, but bread and water, or maybe even a bowl of thin, watery gruel.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator got poke salad.

Mr. SASSER. The Senator got poke salad to get him through the next few years.

But if it was spinach, and there was some bitter medicine for the Appropriations Committee in the budget resolution that passed yesterday. I say to my friend, that spinach, if you remember, is what made Popeye the Sailor Man so strong. When we eat that spinach, as we ate yesterday, and as we are going to eat it for the next few years, that spinach is going to make us strong, because it is going to create jobs, and it is going to build the infrastructure of this country in the out-years, and that is what is important. That is why this stimulus package is so important.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will yield, when the Senators voted for the package on yesterday, the budget resolution, they did say to the Appropriations Committee: You do not wait until the reconciliation bill passes, you take your spinach now. It is included in that resolution.

Mr. SASSER. Precisely. That is correct. In other words, when that conference report—which I believe will be virtually unchanged—comes back here and is adopted by the Senate, it will conform largely to that budget resolution we passed yesterday.

And that puts the cap on the Appropriations Committee. That tells this Appropriations Committee how much they can spend by way of discretionary spending, and so that was your spinach. It may look like poke salad and may taste like poke salad but it is going to be spinach. I believe that spinach is going to make us stronger.

Mr. BYRD. One further question I ask the Senator: Can every Senator who voted for this resolution go home and tell his constituents that he has voted to cut discretionary spending and that the cut is in place as soon as the budget resolution was passed?

Mr. SARBANES. He certainly can. Any Senator, he or she, can go home and state categorically that we have voted to cut discretionary spending in this last budget resolution to the tune of in excess of $160 billion. That is a fact.

Mr. RIEGLE. Madam President, will the Senator yield for one additional comment?

Mr. SARBANES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. RIEGLE. This is just a voice from Michigan that says we have to have this stimulus package enacted.

Mr. SARBANES. And now.

Mr. RIEGLE. We have to have it right now because we are not getting the job growth in this country that we have to have. We now have some 17 million people in America who are either unemployed, who have dropped out of sight because they are now in the discouraged-worker category and not looking for work, or people working part time because they cannot find full-time work. And in that area, if a person today works as little as 1 hour a week, the Department of Labor statistics say that person is employed.

Mr. SARBANES. That is right.

Mr. RIEGLE. They are employed even if they are only working an hour a week. The problem for people working 5 hours a week or 7 hours a week or even 20 or 25 hours a week, is that is not enough earnings to support themselves or their families. In virtually every case we have a very, very serious economic problem.

Mr. SARBANES. And virtually in every one of those cases when they are working part time, they do not have health care coverage.

Mr. RIEGLE. Absolutely.

Mr. SARBANES. Not only do they not have a full-time job, so they are under pressure scrambling to get enough to pay for the groceries. They come under the additional pressure that they no longer have health care coverage.

Mr. RIEGLE. Exactly.

Mr. SARBANES. In this recession, unlike previous recessions, about half the people who lost their jobs were on temporary layoffs and could be expected to be called back.

Mr. RIEGLE. That is right.

Mr. SARBANES. In this recession, only 15 percent are on temporary layoffs; 85 percent have been permanently terminated.

Mr. RIEGLE. That is right. In many cases, the jobs have left the country. Jobs have gone to Mexico, Communist China, Taiwan, and Japan. Those people are not going to be called back to those jobs. So they are out there in the pool of unemployed people.

I saw two veterans of Desert Storm the other day. These were people wearing the uniform of our country not all that many months ago, going over and performing heroically in that foreign policy crisis situation. They are now back here in the United States, out of the armed services. They are unemployed. They are homeless, living in cardboard boxes here in the District of Columbia.

We cannot have a condition like that where we are turning our back on our own people. In fact, the largest single group of homeless in this country right now are veterans. People who have served this country obviously need to be employed in some fashion, need to be in a different circumstance.

But we have to drive this economy up. The chart that you have there shows the fact that we are not getting the normal job recovery that we got after other recessions and that we are way down here. We have a gap of about 4 million jobs that have not come back. Many have left the country.

We have to get the President's stimulus package adopted. If anything, it ought to be bigger. We need every penny of that stimulus to drive the job-creation engine in this country. Most of these jobs are in the private sector. These are private-sector jobs. But we have to get the job growth coming back here because people need the work. They need the income. They cannot feed their families, in many instances. Even though we extended the unemployment compensation benefits again, that is not a real answer. The only answer is to get someone into a job situation.

I received a letter the other day from a man down in Texas who has a graduate degree who has been through three different job retraining programs, and he has come through them successfully. He still cannot find a job. So even job retraining does not mean anything if there are not jobs out there at the end of it where someone can apply the retraining and actually get on a payroll and start working, supporting themselves as they want to do, and make a contribution to the country.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SARBANES. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I just want to assure the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from West Virginia that the stimulus proposal is absolutely essential for the men and women of New England and Massachusetts. We have 6 percent of the Nation's population, but we have lost 30 percent of the jobs.

My State of Massachusetts is second only to California in our lagging rate of recovery. Massachusetts, tragically, is the No. 1 State in the country on mortgage foreclosures on homes, and about second in the country in terms of small business bankruptcies. Every time I have travelled there, people ask, where is the investment in our future?

As the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Maryland have pointed out, what has been lacking in our economy over the period of the last 12 years is investment rather than consumption. That point has been made time after time.

I am mindful, as this debate begins, of the extraordinarily important work that was done by former Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall and former Republican Senator and former chairman of the Republican National Committee, Bill Brock. They traveled around the world and looked at our major competitors to determine the basis for their success. And the overwhelming conclusion of that report, "America's Choice," was that investing in a country's people, along the lines that have been recommended in this proposal; is absolutely essential if you are going to have high-paying jobs and be internationally competitive.

That is what this program is about; that is what this program is about. I agree with the points made by my friend from Michigan. If there is any concern that many of us have, it is that this stimulus package is not enough.

We have a record and we know what investment policy is all about. Not only do we in this country, but so do our economic competitors. And, Madam President, I say to the Senators from Maryland and West Virginia that this investment program is absolutely essential.

Finally, I would just like to ask if I am correct, and I ask the Senator from Maryland. Of the last five budget reconciliation bills, in 1990 the reconciliation came at the end of October; 1989, the end of November; 1987, the end of December; 1986 came in March of 1987; and 1985 was the end of December. So if we wait until we pass the budget reconciliation bill to release the majority of the funds in the stimulus package we may be waiting not a few months but up to 1 year.

We are all talking about trying to do something, to invest in the children in this country. But they want to delay some of the chapter 1 funds. They say all you have to really do is get a letter to the teachers and tell them the funds will be there in September. That is a lot of hogwash. If you look over this program of delays, you are talking about investments in education, investments in training, and basic and fundamental support for infrastructure programs that result in new jobs.

So, Madam President, I ask our friend: Does the Senator, who is the chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, believe that the timing is correct; given the range of the different workloads of Congress, that we would even be able to—is he willing to accept that all we are really talking about is maybe a month or two in terms of the deferred investment? Or does he believe, as I do, that if we have that kind of a fencing program, we are in a very real way threatening the very modest investment program that can result in job creation?

(Mr. DORGAN assumed the chair.)

Mr. SARBANES. I say to the Senator, I think we are going to do better on the timing on the reconciliation bills than in past years, and I think it is very important we do that.

But I want to make this point. As the Senator suggests, this stimulus package is needed now. We are not talking about 3 months from now. We have to get moving now. There are people waiting to go.

The mayors and Governors need to know about the summer jobs program. They are putting out highway contracts today. They are getting the best bids they have ever gotten in their lives. They are getting tremendous value on the dollar right now because the private contractors want the work. You can talk to any procurement office that puts out highway contracts, mass transit contracts, and they will tell you they are getting terrific bids. They have an idle work force and idle equipment, and they want to put it to work.

What the President is talking about are programs here that can start building this momentum. They are needed now. We have unemployed people with skills who cannot find jobs. They have skills in their hands and in their heads that could be put to work for America. There is equipment sitting idle not being used.

You can put that equipment to work next week—and that is what we are trying to do—but the product it could have produced this week is lost forever. We are losing every day an incredible amount of product that could be produced for the betterment of the country. And every day that you have an idle person who does not work or idle equipment that is not utilized the product is lost forever. You never get that back. You may put it to work tomorrow and get what it can produce, but what it could have produced today or yesterday, if it had been working, is gone forever. Why are we wasting that?

We have to get this country moving. That is what President Clinton is talking about. He has a vision for the country. He is going to get it moving now, going to restore the jobs, get the economic growth, get an economy strong enough to help bring down the deficit and do these investments.

The Senator from Massachusetts is absolutely correct on this investment strategy.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. SARBANES. Let me just show the Senator one chart, because it is right on his investment point.

This is fixed investment as a share of GDP in the 10 largest economies around the world.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield on this point here in terms of the investment?

Mr. SARBANES. This chart shows fixed investment as a share of GDP. Here is the United States. Japan, Germany, France all invest here at higher rates than the United States. This is the very point the Senator was making.

Mr. KENNEDY. The fact is, in those countries, Mr. President, every one of the political parties support that kind of investment. They have effectively taken that off the table in those countries' political dialog and debate.

If you are talking about stimulating the economy to get the private sector investing in business or if you are talking about investments in education, in health, and training, those issues are off the table. All political parties support it. They may differ on issues involving refugees, differ on issues of defense policy, but in Western Europe and Japan, every one of the political parties have embraced the concept embodied in the stimulus package before us here.

We finally have the opportunity to make a small downpayment and we are being asked to defer it, delay it, or cut it back.

Mr. SARBANES. The German apprenticeship program represents a tremendous investment in Germany on their part in training their workers, their young people.

Actually, 30 percent of American students go to college; 70 percent do not go to college. And yet we do not have an apprenticeship or training program that even begins to approximate what they are doing in Germany. It costs money. You talk to the Germans about it. The businessmen are for it, the union people are for it, they are all for it, because they realize that the strength of their economy depends upon it.

We have to do the same thing here if we are going to compete with them.

Mr. RIEGLE. Will the Senator yield on that point?

I know we have some of our friends on the other side of the aisle who are objecting to the stimulus plan. They do not want to invest, as President Clinton is saying, in our own people.

But just last year, the past administration came in here with a stimulus program for Communist China, under the heading of the most-favored-nation trading status, that allowed Communist China to have a $19 billion trade surplus with the United States last year.

What that boils down to, you talk about a stimulus, that is not chicken-feed. The last year of the Bush administration put 19 billion dollars' worth of trade stimulus into Communist China.

Mr. SARBANES. In 1986, we had an even trade balance with Communist China.

Mr. RIEGLE. That is exactly right.

Mr. SARBANES. Today, in 6 short years, our trade deficit with the People's Republic of China has reached almost $20 billion.

The Bush Treasury itself reported that the People's Republic of China was manipulating their currency. They had instituted a set of administrative controls. They were, in effect, flagrantly violating all of the rules of open trade, fair trade, in order to gain an advantage, and they are gaining an advantage.

Mr. RIEGLE. That is exactly right.

So if you take that, that, in effect, was an economic program by our Government for Communist China. We put 19 billion dollars' worth of trade stimulus into Communist China last year. We took $19 billion out of our economy, we took 19 billion dollars' worth of jobs out of the United States, and under that policy sent that to Communist China.

The public said, "Enough of that." They elected a new President. He has now come in with a plan for America, and he says it is time for a little bit of stimulus and investment in our people here in this country. That is what people want.

But you see the opposition coming from the other side. You know, if Bush had won and was in here asking for a stimulus program again for Communist China, you would not hear all this objection coming from the other side—or if it was a stimulus program for Thailand or some other country—because we were helping all those countries, but we had no plan for our country.

Now we elect a President who comes along, who has an economic growth plan for America to invest in our people, to give them a chance to come forward, and who is it that stands up and objects to it?

I mean, we are running into the opposition from the very people who, up until now, have been willing to support every conceivable kind of stimulus program for other countries. Now we are asking for that for our own country so we can catch up—you take that infrastructure investment chart that you just had here. Why should we be down at the bottom? Why should Japan be up at the top?

Japan in the last decade, since 1980, has had a trade surplus with the United States of over $500 billion. They have taken over one-half trillion dollars out of our economy. All that money that Japan is now investing in their people and their economy, that is money that used to be our money. That used to be our money.

And so now, because of this huge trade deficit, they have taken all of this capital out of the United States, so they have plenty of money to invest in their economy. And it is money that used to be ours.

The only way we are going to close that gap is get our job base up to where it was. We cannot continue to be last on the list. I mean, that is the policy of the last 12 years. That is what people voted against in the last election. They said: "Get rid of that." Let us move the United States up this ladder and let us get back out in the lead. Let us invest in our people for a change.

I support the program. We need every penny in this stimulus package.

I just want to say, before yielding to the Senator from West Virginia, I appreciate his leadership in going right to the issue of the stimulus package and fighting for it and getting it here so that we can enact it.

We have more people on food stamps in the United States of America today than we have had at any time in our history. That is after the 12 years of Reaganomics and Bushanomics and trickle down and all the rest of it. We have more people on food stamps today in the United States than ever in our history.

The eighth largest major city in our country is in my home State, the city of Detroit. It has the highest poverty rate of any city in this country. I am talking about poverty among children—among children. Are they going to wait longer because we cannot do anything, even though the Japanese are doing something, the Germans are doing something, every other nation is doing something? Then we try to do something. We get a new President, he has the initiative to pay attention and offer an economic plan for America. And we are going to say no, we cannot do it? Of course we can do it. We cannot afford not to do it. It is time to invest in our own people.

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SARBANES. I yield to the distinguished Senator. The Senator from Iowa actually has spoken very eloquently on this investment issue. I ask the Senator, what does he think about this?

Mr. HARKIN. I think the Senator for yielding. I was listening to the comments of my friend from Michigan. As I listened to him speak I began thinking that for the last 12 years, we have had a series of stimulus packages. We had one for the rich. We had one for the junk bond dealers. We had one for the S&L manipulators. We had a stimulus package for all of them. We had a stimulus package for China, as the Senator pointed out. But now when we want a stimulus package for the little guy in America, for American workers, for the people who have been put out of work by the supply-side nonsense of the last 12 years, they say no, we cannot do it. We cannot afford it, they say. Now, when we want a little bit of stimulus for the little guy in America, they say we cannot afford it.

The Senator from Michigan is right on target on this. We have people out of work. Of the 300,000 jobs created in the last 18 months, 82 percent of them are part-time jobs; 82 percent part-time jobs. Is that the future of America? People working part time, who cannot even make enough money to feed and clothe their kids and pay the rent? Or are we going to have an economy that is going to grow and provide meaningful jobs for people? That is what this stimulus package is about.

There are those who say, well, maybe we can put it off for a while. Put it off for a while? They say unemployment is only 9 percent. Unemployment is only 9 percent. That may be true. But if you are the one who is unemployed, the unemployment rate is 100 percent. Think about that. If you are unemployed, the unemployment rate is 100 percent.

We have money in the stimulus package for extended unemployment benefits. We have to provide this assistance. That is not what people want; they want jobs instead. But to get them through the rough time, pass this stimulus package, and start creating jobs and put people back to work. That is what this stimulus is all about. Yet there are those who say no, we cannot afford it. We have to hold it up. We have to delay it.

When you are out of work, you do not know where your next dollar is coming from. You have your kids who want a decent education. You have to pay health bills. We are going to have a health care plan, which we are going to produce this year.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education Appropriations Subcommittee, which will fund many of the programs in the stimulus I just want to say we—indeed America—cannot wait. We cannot put passage of this stimulus off any longer.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee has spoken forcefully and eloquently about this. I just want to publicly pay my respects to him for his courageous leadership on this issue. He has forthrightly put the issue out here for all of us and for the American people. As he said so many times yesterday, if people have amendments, let them come out here and offer the amendments. But they will not do it. Here it is, Friday afternoon, now 1:15 in the afternoon. Yet we cannot get anyone to offer an amendment. Indeed, the Senate is almost empty; there are three Senators right now on the Senate floor.

Where are these people who say they want to modify this package. Well, why do they not come over and offer their amendments? Where are they? Maybe they have gone someplace and they have a few people holding up everything here.

Every day we delay in approving this stimulus package means more people on welfare rolls, more kids turning to drugs, more families without hope, more families in desperation.

Again, Mr. President, this stimulus package strikes at the very heart of what the American people voted for last November. When voters were asked what their main concern was, they said the economy. We all have read the little stickers that were put up in front of everyone's desk in the Clinton campaign saying, "It's the economy, stupid." That is what it was, the economy. It was not the war in the Mideast. It was not foreign affairs. It was not some of the great social issues that have beguiled us in the past.

It was the economy. The American people, after 12 long years of the failed supply-side policies, finally said: Enough. We went with you President Reagan; we went with the supply-siders, and now our Nation is broke. We are in debt up to our eyeballs. We are the biggest debtor nation in the world. Our jobs are being lost, and the only jobs available are part time. It is time for a new game plan for America. That is what the American people voted for. They voted for a new President who had the guts and the courage to come forward with a plan, a plan to get this economy going, to reduce the deficit, and to invest in the future of America.

Sure, it is a tough plan. Darned right it is tough. You have heard a lot of talk the last few days about holding up some of this stimulus package so we could first get to the cuts. Do the cuts first and then have the stimulus later.

I guess I heard this refrain. One of the proponents of this position has said: It's like eating your spinach first and then you have dessert.

I have a couple of observations on that one. I guess the first observation is that we have already had the spinach. We just voted yesterday on a deficit reduction package for the next 5 years that is the biggest deficit reduction package this body has ever voted for, $502 billion in 5 years. This is real deficit reduction. These are not the phony kind of numbers games we saw out of the Reagan and Bush administrations, which hid the real numbers behind a lot of smoke and mirrors. There are no smoke and mirrors in the budget passed yesterday. There is real, tough, hard deficit reduction over 5 years—$502 billion. So we have had the spinach.

But I do not see this stimulus package as dessert. Dessert? There are 9 million people unemployed, and just 300,000 jobs have been created in the last 18 months and 80 percent of them part time, most of them minimum wage. And, now we have a package, a program that will help rebuild the infrastructure of this country and create good, meaningful jobs. This is hard work. No one is giving anybody dessert. These are jobs that are going to require you to go to work, put in a full day's work, whether it is building highways or sewer and water, or whether it is a teacher teaching a disadvantaged young person in a Head Start Program.

Dessert? What kind of nonsense is this, that somehow this stimulus package is dessert. There is not one penny of welfare in this, not one handout, not one giveaway. But this package creates jobs. And someone has the gall to say this is dessert? Tell that to the 9 million Americans out of work. Somehow they are going to get dessert because we are going to get them going back to work on a job—that somehow is dessert. I guess what it is more like, Mr. President, it is a high-protein meal. It is going to give some muscle to this economy, trim the fat, and put some muscle back into the workplace of this economy.

When I heard about how you have to eat the spinach first and then you have dessert, that somehow the stimulus package is dessert, boy, what a convoluted, twisted view this is of what is happening to the American people.

We have a recovery going on. It has been going on for 19 to 21 months, I have been told. Interest rates are down. But, Mr. President, while we may have an economic recovery, we still have a jobs recession; a jobs recession. I think we have to start looking at the economy in that way: You can have an economic recovery but you still have a lot of people out of work. So it is a jobs recession.

After 21 months, we have 9 million Americans still out of work, with another 6.5 million working part time. With 82 percent of the 300,000 jobs created just part-time jobs.

We have a 7-percent unemployment rate which is higher than both the 5.3-percent rate we had when the recession began and higher than the 6.8 percent when it ended officially.

I remind my colleagues, again, you can talk about unemployment at 7 percent, 6.8 percent, 8 percent, whatever it might be and, it may not sound too bad to those of us who have jobs. Six percent, seven percent, eight percent. But when you are the one who is out of work, it is 100 percent. That is what we have to do. We have to put ourselves in the shoes and the places of the people who are out of work. Getting this economy moving again is exactly what the stimulus package would do. It would get our fiscal house in order.

Opponents of this package have said that deficit reduction has to be our first priority. Well, we have addressed that. As I said, we have addressed that with the budget we adopted yesterday; $502 billion over 5 years. But I also want to point out something else. The last two Presidents of the United States adhered to the failed policies of supply-side economics. I prefer to call it, trickle-down economics, because that is just what it was, trickle down. You put a lot at the top and hope it trickles down. That is what supply-side was. They took an old failed policy that failed under Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover and dressed it up with fancy words and called it supply-side. Nonetheless, it was still trickle down, as it was called back in the 1920's.

The last two Presidents rang up $4 trillion on the credit card, and they have left us with a $4 trillion Visa bill. I guess I will use my Visa card since I mentioned it. It was a little over 10 years ago, it was in fact 12 years ago when I was a Member of the House of Representatives. Then Speaker O'Neill asked me to respond once to one of then-President Reagan's messages on his supply-side economics.

I pulled out my credit card and I held it up and said, "The American people have now been put on a credit card." That is what Reagan did, he put America on a credit card.

I will tell you, it is going to feel wonderful to the few who used that credit card because they went out and lived high on the hog. But sometime in the not-too-distant future, someone is going to have to pay the bills on that credit card and, it most likely will not be the people who had that high time during the eighties on the credit card. No, it will be the working people of America.

I said that in 1982 on national television. Little did I know how right I would be. Reagan and later President Bush put this country on a credit card and everybody seemed to feel good about it at the time. But now the bill is due and it is up to us to pay the bill. It will not be easy. It will not be as easy as using the credit card. We all know after having a night on the town, it is sure easy to ring up the credit on that Visa card. But it is tough when the bill comes due the next month.

Now, the bills are here, and we have to pay them. We cannot put it off any longer. That is what we did with the budget yesterday which will make those deficit reductions. But now the people in America who did not enjoy the party in the 1980's, who struggled, who worked, raised their families, 9 million of them are out of work now. It is time to put them back to work.

Why do we need to put them back to work? Aside from the basic premise that it is better for people to work than just to draw unemployment compensation, aside from the fact that everybody ought to be working and contributing to our society, aside from all that, we have to put these people back to work so we can pay the credit card bill that Reagan and Bush and those trickle-down economists rang up for us in the 1980's. We have to put this country back to work to pay that bill. Otherwise, those people who had the party in the eighties are going to put the rest of us in debtor's prison. It is like debtor's prison, just paying on the deficit year after year after year.

We do not have to do that and this stimulus package will start that recovery.

In the last 20 months, Mr. President, we have regained only 1 out of 20 manufacturing jobs lost—1 out of 20—lost during the recession. If this were a normal recovery, normal in terms of what we have had in the past, we would have about 3 million more jobs than we have today.

Again, do not take my word for it, Mr. President. I have a job and so does everyone else here. So, I ask those who argue we do not need a stimulus to think about putting themselves in the shoes of those who do not have jobs.

I suggest to those who think we can put off this stimulus package to ask the thousands of people laid off by Northwest Airlines last month how they feel about being unemployed. Ask the 8,700 people cut from the payroll of McDonnell Douglas. Ask the 10,000 put out of work at United Technologies, the 50,000 from Sears Roebuck, the 20,000 from Boeing, or those dropped from the payrolls of General Motors, IBM, and Kodak in the past 3 months.

Let me point out there are two parts to the stimulus. There are unemployment benefits which will run out next month, in April. We need to make sure we get these people through the short period of unemployment, but we also need to start the economy going again more generally. The stimulus package will help achieve this.

Ask these people who have been laid off if we are in a recovery. Opponents of the stimulus package say the economy is fine, we do not have to do anything. They say, jobs are right around the corner, Mr. President, just right around the corner. Well, that corner keeps receding further and further away. Jobs are not right around the corner, and the only jobs that are there are part-time, minimum wage jobs. So we cannot afford to wait. This package will create 500,000 jobs, which is at least equal to and perhaps greater than all of the jobs created during the 21 months of this so-called recovery.

Mr. President, the President's plan is the first honest attempt that we have had in 12 years to reduce the deficit, create jobs, and invest in the future. I say it that way because it really is a three-legged stool: Creating the jobs, reducing the deficit, investing in the future. If you take away one of those legs, the stool falls over. Maybe that is what some of the opponents of this package are thinking: If they can just yank one leg away, the stool will fall over and make the President look bad and maybe they will have an advantage going into the next election.

We had our politics last year. We had our debates and our campaigns. Anyone who knows this Senator knows I love to campaign as well as anyone else, and I like to fight as hard as anyone on a partisan issue. But there must be a period of time when we set that aside, and we debate here, as we should, our differences as to which direction we go. But it ought to be done within the context of moving the legislation or, if someone is opposed to it, voting against it and stopping it. That is the proper procedure for the Senate, not dragging it out and filibustering it or to maneuver for some political advantage.

That is why I keep saying, Mr. President, if someone has an amendment to this with which they want to change it, or move it in a different direction, come on out here and offer the amendment. But no one will do it. What they want to do is take away that one leg of the three-legged stool; maybe it will fall over.

I find it interesting that the opponents say the Government has no business being involved with a stimulus.

I will repeat again, Mr. President, we have had a stimulus package for the last 12 years. We had a stimulus package for the wealthy. We had a stimulus package for junk bond dealers. We had a stimulus package for the S&L manipulators. As the distinguished Senator from Michigan pointed out, we had a stimulus package for China. We have had a stimulus package for other countries. And now when we ask for a little stimulus package for the hard-hit American family and American workers who need some jobs and need some hope, they say no, we cannot do it.

Well, it was all right for the big, powerful Federal Government to provide a stimulus for the wealthy in supply-side economics and use the trickle-down for the rest of us.

But I come from farm country, and you do not fertilize a tree from the top down. It does not quite work that way. You have to fertilize at the roots and when you do the tree grows strong. That is why supply-side, trickle-down economics does not work. You cannot fertilize it from the top down. That is why it never worked. But, boy, the top of the tree looked nice. But the trunk and the roots were withering.

That is what happened with trickle-down, supply-side economics. The rich got richer. Junk bond dealers made off with a lot. So did the S&L manipulators. And now we are bailing them out with $200 billion.

So if the Government can provide that kind of stimulus to the few at the top, surely the Government can turn around and provide an economic recovery program to put people back to work in America. We spent $200 billion to bail out the S&L's, and we are haggling over $4 billion to extend unemployment benefits to people out of work—$200 billion to bail the S&L's and we are haggling over the total stimulus package of $16 billion to put people back to work? Where are our priorities around here?

Let me list some items that we seem to be able to afford. We can afford to spend between $8.5 to $11 billion on the superconducting super collider but we cannot afford $500 million for a Head Start summer program that will create about 50,000 jobs.

Mr. President, we will be talking later, about this superconducting super collider. It started out as about a $4 billion program. Then it went to $6 billion. Then it went to $8 billion. Now I have heard it is up to $11 billion.

I am not a physicist, and I do not understand all of the ramifications of this. But I do understand that one of the reasons they want to build this superconducting super collider is they want to find out what happened in the first few milliseconds after the big bang. Well, watching the superconducting super collider grow from $4 billion to $6 billion to $8 billion to $11 billion, I finally figured it out. It is the big bang. It just keeps growing exponentially every year, sucking up more money all the time. But we cannot afford $500 million for a Head Start summer program to start educating and serving kids, and also create 50,000 jobs.

We can afford to spend $30 billion on the star wars program but we cannot afford $1 billion for a summer jobs program for some of our youth who are out on the streets.

The failed policies and tax breaks of the past 12 years are what helped create this recession. It is what put those kids on the streets, put people out of work. That old trickle-down economics. That is what this stimulus package will help reverse.

People who say we cannot afford this are just wrong. Those people who had the party say no, now we have to be in debtor's prison. But I think the American people deserve better. They voted for a new direction. They voted for job creation. This stimulus package will create over 500,000 jobs and give small businesses the break they deserve. This stimulus package also values our Nation's most vibrant asset—its people. After 12 long years of ignoring the working people of America, I say it is about time.

In my State of Iowa alone the stimulus will bring $115 million for job creation, infrastructure investments, development, and education programs that will have an immediate impact. It will also provide $4 billion for extended unemployment benefits that we need for people who are out of work.

The Department of Labor advises that without this appropriation, they will run out of money for these benefits in April. It is vitally important we pass this bill to ensure that the 1.8 million that may go off the rolls receive their benefits. The stimulus also creates $1 billion for summer youth employment, training, and education enrichment. This will serve an estimated 680,000 economically disadvantaged youth between the ages of 14 and 21.

It is springtime here in Washington. Maybe it is hard to envision what it is going to be like during those hot summer months on the streets of Washington or Los Angeles, New York, and Chicago when young people out there want summer jobs. Do we want them to listen to the drug dealers who come by and ask, "Do you want to get rich quick? Here is the way to do it. Push dope."

How many more will fall into that pit because we did not have the guts to pass this bill expeditiously and provide for a summer youth employment program? Kids who are on the streets need this work. And it is good work, not make work but good work. They get training, they get experience, and they get educational enrichment.

Educational enrichment is another part of the stimulus. Not too many people recognize it. In this jobs program, there is an educational component that if they are working on a summer job, they also have to be getting some educational enrichment in the English language, in writing skills, in speaking skills, and in the basics.

And there is $500 million for a Head Start summer program. With these funds 350,000 children will be able to participate in the summer Head Start Program, about 50,000 jobs will be created.

Again, Mr. President, I think a lot of people look upon the stimulus package as building highways and sewer and water systems and bridges and that type of thing, and those are important. I have talked a lot about the need to do that in this country. But there are other jobs like teaching Head Start kids, chapter I kids. Those jobs are valuable, too—every bit as valuable as working on a highway, because it has to do with what our next generation is going to be like and whether they will get the health care and love and educational enrichment that they need.

I mentioned chapter I, Mr. President. The administration proposed at one time a $500 million summer program which would reach prekindergarten through high school children and create 83,000 jobs for 33,000 teachers and 50,000 other staff.

Again, you might say that is "make" work. I say no, it is reaching down to disadvantaged kids, giving them some educational enrichment, some hope, a little bit of self-esteem, so that they are not out on the streets listening to the dope peddlers about the way they can get rich quick.

Those jobs are every bit as important as laying concrete on the highways.

This bill includes $300 million for an expanded immunization program, to increase vaccination levels of all children under age 2. You say we do not need that? Well, ask the kids who got measles a couple of years ago during the measles epidemic. Some of them will carry the effects of that the rest of their lives. Some of them suffer disability, some died.

You might ask some of them whether or not they think the immunization program is important.

There is $200 million for AIDS care. I see the distinguished Senator from California here, who was mayor of the great city of San Francisco for a long time. You might go out to San Francisco and ask the people who are running the hospitals taking care of people who are sick and dying of AIDS, ask them if they think we can just put this stimulus off.

Ask the people who are suffering from AIDS. Do they think we can put it off a little bit, that we do not need this stimulus package?

Those jobs are important, too, Mr. President, for the health care workers taking care of our sick and dying.

The programs I have been talking about are really the programs that come under my jurisdiction on the appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education.

And the $1.8 billion to eliminate the Pell grant shortfall, what is that all about? What does the Pell grant shortfall mean? Every year we have a Pell Grant Program that gives grants to young men and women to go to college. Obviously, there is an income threshold. You have to be very low income to qualify for Pell grants, named after our distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, CLAIBORNE PELL. If you come from a lower income family and you want to go to college, you can get a Pell grant.

The Pell Grant Program obviously has borrowing and spending authority, because you never know how many kids are going to apply for it, and how many qualify.

What has happened over the last few years in the recession? We have had more people fall into poverty because they lost their jobs and they lost their income, and as a result more young people qualified for Pell grants. And we provided the Pell grant money so they could go to college.

But now that we try to balance the books, we find we have a shortfall. If we never had the recession, we would not have had a Pell grant shortfall. But because of the recession—because more people fell below the poverty line and more kids qualified—we have to deal with this education grant shortfall. It is about $1.8 billion—that is pretty close to $2 billion right now.

Is it important to pay that bill? I suppose we could try to put it off, like the Reagan and Bush administrations did, but we have to pay it now so that we can have Pell grants next year. We could postpone paying our debt, but what would happen is that we would squeeze out the other Pell grantees.

In the law right now the maximum level for a Pell grant is $3,700; that you could qualify for if you are low income.

But last year we had to cut the maximum amount from $2,400 to $2,300 because we did not have enough money. If we do not fund the Pell grant shortfall this year, I am told that the maximum grant will go from $2,300 down to about $1,800 next year. That means more young people coming from low-income families will not be able to afford to go to college.

So for those that say we can put this off, I am saying that, you're telling a lot of young people who cannot afford to go to college to forget it. You are telling them that the doors are closed.

So this is the right bill at the right time, Mr. President. In fact, I would argue perhaps we should have done it a long time ago. But did not have the opportunity and now we do. We have waited over 20 months for the economy to create jobs on its own. But while the economy has recovered and is improving, we still are in a jobs recession.

Last November, the American people voted for change. They did not vote to keep the same economic policies of the Bush administration. They wanted something different. They want to have an honest budget. They want to pay the bills. They want to rebuild the economy of America for their kids.

That is what this package is. It gives us the action that we need, not in a phony smoke and mirrors way but in a real way.

So for the life of me, I cannot understand why some of the opponents of this bill want to delay it, or fence it off.

Mr. President, let me speak simply: Stimulus denied is jobs denied. Stimulus denied is opportunity denied. Stimulus denied is hope denied. That is what this package is all about, for 9 million Americans who cannot afford to wait another 20 months for more part-time work. What we should be doing is getting this package passed.

But, I look around, I still see only three Senators on the floor. I cannot understand why those who say we have to change this package are not here. Where are they? Friday afternoon, almost 2 o'clock in the afternoon, where are they?

I would like to know why they cannot come over here and offer their amendments.

Mr. President, the employment picture in America is not getting any better. We are falling behind everyone else. We have seen these charts. The one thing I have talked a lot about in the past is the need for us to invest in our infrastructure.

The International Bank of Settlements in Geneva, Switzerland, did a study a couple of years ago. I read a little bit about it in the paper. I got a copy of it because it caught my eye.

I looked over their analysis of the world economic situation. I commend it. I recommend it to anyone, because what they pointed out in that economic analysis was that in those countries where there is a high level of investment in infrastructure—in both physical and human infrastructure—in those countries, there was a higher rate of economic growth in the private sector. They went on to point out that if you are in private business and you are shipping something by a truck, that should only take 3 or 4 hours, but because of traffic delays and bad highways or bad bridges, it may take 8 hours or 2 days, that is lost productivity.

When you are trying to manufacture an item that takes some skill and high technology and you have a worker that can barely speak the English language and does not understand basic math principles, that is lost productivity in the private sector.

So the International Bank of Settlements pointed this out, and this is not a U.S. institution. This is the International Bank of Settlements, hard-headed bankers, pointing out that where there is a high level of public investment, the private sector does better.

The report states that, as a percent of gross domestic product, the Japanese were spending about 17 times what we were in infrastructure. As a percent of gross domestic product, the Germans were spending about nine times what we were on infrastructure. Their economies are growing; they put people back to work.

Right now, in America, public investment as a percent of gross domestic product has fallen to about 2.6 percent. In the 1960's, it was 4.5 percent.

In other words, we dropped 50 percent since the 1960's in terms of investment in the infrastructure of this country. It is no small wonder. When I drive back and forth to work, some of those roads out there nearly knock off my car doors. It is no small wonder that we had the water break in Chicago that shut down the Board of Exchange.

It is no small wonder that we are losing a lot of our high-technology jobs, because we do not have the young people that have the basic math skills and the training and the work experience to take over these high-technology jobs.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will yield for a question, Mr. President, I have been listening to the able Senator. I think he is making some excellent points. Is he saying that public investment in infrastructure, human and physical, encourages private investment as well? When he talked about the constituent who was speaking of adding to his van fleet or his truck fleet, suppose a constituent who has a business feels that he ought to buy a new fleet of trucks, but down the road just a little way is a bridge with a big sign on it and a chain across it, and the sign says "closed." And this means that the businessman who wants to invest in a brand new fleet of trucks—all red trucks, or white, whatever—if he has to have his trucks drive 50 miles, or 20 miles, or whatever, on a detour in order to get to the other side of the river, is he going to be encouraged to invest in that kind of a purchase of trucks?

But if we build our infrastructure, build the bridges, repair the bridges, repair the roads, then private investors will be encouraged to invest and expand their plant and equipment. And as they invest, productivity will increase.

If I understood the distinguished Senator, he was saying that Japan, Canada, the then Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Italy, United Kingdom, all of these countries over the recent years have been investing in infrastructure. They have been making public investments, by an increasing percentage of their gross domestic product—far above the plowing back that the United States has been doing. And as these other countries have increased public investment, I believe I understood him to be saying that their productivity increased concomitantly, and there is that correlation then between public investment and productivity. If there is an increase in investment and an increase in productivity, what happens to jobs? Is there an increase in jobs? Are there more people working?

Mr. HARKIN. The chairman put his finger right on it. I will answer him with one of my favorite stories. Henry Ford had two good ideas in his lifetime—he may have had more, but there are two that I know of—one was that Henry Ford, when he started building the automobile, wanted to pay his workers enough money so they could afford to buy what they made. He was sort of an anathema to the business community at that time for saying those things. But he was right on the mark.

Another idea he had was about mass production. I have often thought about Henry Ford and his cars. He was a genius. But I often ask people how far would Henry Ford's old Model A have gone if we did not build the roads and the bridges?

The public-private sector working in that kind of a union to build the great highways and transportation network of this country allowed the automobile companies to manufacture and build bigger, better, faster, higher speed automobiles. They put a lot of people to work and made us number one in the world in automobiles.

But, people say, well, the private sector can do it. There are a lot of good things they can do, but it takes that public infrastructure to allow it to be productive and efficient in our present world.

Mr. BYRD. Before the Senator tells the story, Mr. President, would the Senator not agree that the package that is before the Senate, the President's job package, is calculated to invest in highways? Does it not provide the funding up to the full level of ISTEA? Is it not contemplated that the various State highway commissions throughout the country have the plans on the shelves, which can be used immediately? They already have their environmental impact assessments, their rights-of-way and their designs and plans; they are all ready to go, but they do not have the money.

The President is not pulling any wool over anybody's eyes. He told everybody that he was for more investment, for more investment in infrastructure. Did he not say that? Yes, he did.

So now he is delivering on his promise. Is there not in this package before the Senate today moneys that will go to the States and that can be immediately applied to road construction and road repairs? That means thousands of people put to work.

I have no further questions along that line. The question answers itself.

I notice our friend from Idaho on the other side of the aisle wishes to speak. I will not detain my friend from Iowa longer. The Senator from Iowa is making a good speech.

But what about the $4 billion in this package in unemployment benefits? There are 1.8 million people whose unemployment benefits are going to expire, are they not, as of April 5? Then what happens? What about them? Are we going to continue to drag our feet and not pass this package and give those unemployed workers and their families some relief?

(Mr. AKAKA assumed the Chair.)

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, as the chairman knows, these people are not the slackers in our society. These are unemployment benefits for people who have been working, who went out and worked, but because of the economic downturn, now find themselves out of work. These are not the people who are trying to get welfare all the time. They have been trying to succeed, trying to work.

Of course they deserve these benefits. They deserve to get these unemployment benefits to get them through the current tough times. But they also deserve this economic stimulus to create the jobs so they have a job to go back to. The chairman has put his finger on it.

One of the benefits of campaigning around the country, as I did a couple years ago, is I learned a lot about America. I remember I was in a small town in one of our smaller States, and I began talking about the need for investment in infrastructure. It turned out this very small community, which I do not think had more than—5,000 people.

I went out to a work site one day. A water main to a fire hydrant had broken, and the people there had to dig up the dirt with this big backhoe. They dug it out, and they had to get down where the main had broken to put a new piece on there with a collar on it.

I was up on one of the work days that I do, and I was working with the people of this town. As we dug out that old pipe—it was an old rusted iron pipe—I asked the question, the pipe was put there? It was installed there almost 100 years ago when that town was very small, when not more than 400 or 500 people who lived there at the time.

Those people in that small community almost 100 years ago, spent their hard-earned money to dig up the ground and put in iron water pipes to replace probably some of the old wood ones. They put in iron water pipes so they would have fire protection and clean water. As a result of the effort, and others, the town grew and prospered. Businesses came there. They had water. They had fire protection. They had clean water. Businesses located there and the whole community began to grow.

That is true over all of America. Whether we build the railroads, the highways, the canals that handle the barges, or the Rural Electrification Administration that electrified rural America, the great sewer and water projects that allowed our cities to grow, the land grant universities that taught our kids, all of these great things we built allowed our economy, and the private sector to grow and prosper.

As we dug up that old iron water pipe, I realized a lot of other pipes need to be replaced all over America. You saw what happened in Chicago several years ago. That is just the tip of the iceberg.

But now some people are saying we cannot afford to do it; it costs too much money.

I think about what would have happened in that little community if 100 years ago the community leaders, when they were talking about whether or not they would lay iron water pipe around the town, had said we cannot afford it. And I bet it cost a lot. I bet if you went back and looked at how much that cost by hand to dig those trenches below the frost line 6 or 7 feet deep, lay all that iron water pipe for that community, I bet it cost a pretty penny compared to how much money people were making at the time.

But they looked ahead to the future. They had a vision of the future, and their vision was one of a community growing and prospering, where private businesses would come in and grow and provide work for their kids and grandkids. That is what America has been about—investing in the future. And that is what this stimulus package is about. It invests in our future.

Those who do not think we need to repair our infrastructure, our roads and bridges do not have to go very far. Go south of here to the Wilson bridge. On any given morning, the trucks are backed up for 10- or 15-minute miles. One accident on that bridge backed it up 5 or 6 hours for 20 miles. That bridge was built in the 1960's. I think the Wilson bridge was dedicated about 1962. It served us well for 30 years. Now it is time to invest again in the future.

What would have happened to America if, when they started to lay the railroad track, we said no, we cannot afford to do it; when we started to build the highways, we said, no, we cannot afford to do that either; when we started to build the interstate highway system, we said, no, we cannot afford to do that either; when we started to build the great waterways of America that carried commerce to the Midwest and other parts of this country, we said, no, we cannot do that either? Sorry, it costs too much money. We would not have the America we know today.

We will not have the America we want for our kids and grandkids in the future if we take the attitude that we cannot invest in the infrastructure of this country just as our foreparents did.

That is why this stimulus package is the right thing at the right time. We cannot afford to wait any longer. We cannot afford to put it off another year, put it off another 5 years, just keep putting it off, because the longer we put it off the further downhill our economy goes.

As the distinguished chairman said, this stimulus package is not something that the President has just pulled out of a hat. He campaigned on this. He talked about a stimulus before the election. It was part of his economic program. One of the reasons I felt so strongly about supporting the President in his campaign is because he talked about investing in America.

So it was all out there. He said this was what we were going to do, no smoke and mirrors. The American people elected him President of the United States because they wanted that change.

So what we are talking about here is not something different from what he talked about in the campaign. It is exactly what he talked about. It is what the American people voted for and supported.

If nothing else this bill is keeping faith with the American people. They voted for a change. They voted for this package. And now they said we want to put behind us those last 12 years of supply side; they want to try this new economic program that invests in America.

If nothing else, we have to keep faith with them. We cannot afford to break faith with the American people.

So I hope we could get my colleagues over here to offer those amendments.

I do not understand it. Where are they? We should pass this bill today, on Friday afternoon, before the weekend.

I do not know if the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee can enlighten me any more than he has. He has spoken about it for a long time. He has challenged people to come over here to get on with it.

Mr. President, I see my friend from Idaho. He has waited very patiently. There are a lot of things I wanted to say. I know I repeated myself a couple of times, but sometimes around here you have to repeat yourself—not for the benefit of the Senator from Idaho; he has been here diligently. He has been paying attention and I appreciate that.

But sometimes you have to say things more than once because you want to drive it home around here. And that is why I have taken this time on the floor.

Believe me, Mr. President, I would not have taken 1 minute of time. I would not have taken 1 single minute of time if we could have moved on the bill yesterday and today to vote on the amendments. And if people would have come over and offered their amendment, I would not have spoken; I would not have taken about an hour's time.

I am sort of venting my frustration that we cannot go ahead with this bill and move this stimulus package; that there are those who want to delay it, hold it up, fence it off, keep putting it off, doing whatever little games that are being played on this package. People who are out of work cannot afford to have any more games played.

Have to keep faith with the American people. This is what this bill is about.

Mr. President I yield the floor.

Mr. CRAIG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG] is recognized.

Mr. CRAIG. Thank you, Mr. President.

I rise in opposition to H.R. 1335, the emergency supplemental or the economic stimulus package that our President has put forth.

But before I do that and discuss some of the points of that program this afternoon, let me start by complimenting President Clinton, first of all, for focusing on a significant area of the economy that needs to be addressed and in an immediate way, Mr. President, and that is the phenomenal credit crunch that our small businesses across America are finding themselves in, in their inability to go to the local bank and gain their necessary financing to conduct the normal course of business, to develop their credit lines, to be able to supply inventories to their shelves, to do what small businesses do, and most effectively, across America, grow and expand the economy.

For well over 2 years now we have heard a loud, and growing louder, drumbeat that America's small businesses cannot gain financing, as America's banks strengthen their profit margins.

I had a small businessman in north Idaho call me recently—a man who is a second-generation business person who is operating a business that his father founded—to tell me that, although his credit rating was excellent, the local bank would not loan him money because of the provisions that the FDIC had established that were really hamstringing this individual from gaining the necessary line of credit.

He told me the bank had over $33 million worth of deposits—we are talking about a small town branch office bank. They had less than $11 million of that loaned out, and the rest of it their central bank was investing in Treasury notes because they could not meet the standards or they could not develop the qualifying patrons to identify with those loans. Although that family business was in an economic condition no different than it had been in over the years that it had done business with that bank for many years, it could no longer qualify.

So our President has moved quickly on that front. I hope it materializes. And, if it does, whether it is a $16 billion stimulus package or a $50 billion stimulus package, that one action alone will do more to generate and create real jobs in small town America than any amount of money that might be produced by the taxpayers for that purpose.

Let me also add, the reason I point this important feature out that our President is moving on, I think that is only one-fifth of an equation that really has to be dealt with that we are not being responsible about.

Yesterday, this Senate passed a budget resolution that did a variety of things. My party and I took great issue with it because, although some on the other side would argue that it was a great package that reduced the deficit, my guess is about 4 years from now they will be wanting to take back a fair share of their statements because there will be little to no deficit reduction.

There has been a tremendous tax package proposed by that budget resolution. It is that tax package that will go a long way toward driving this economy down and, in fact, probably destroying some of the job base that we have built over the years.

The reason I mention that in the context of a stimulus package is because it all goes hand and glove together. Small businesses across America is the true engine of our economy, the engine that has created more jobs in the last 5 years than any other economy in the world and more jobs in the last 5 years in this country than ever before in our history.

It was small business America that said we need to see an easing in bank regulations, but that was only one-fifth of the equation.

Last November, when they were polled, they said the first and foremost was to cut taxes, to create more investment capital so they could expand their businesses and put more people to work.

Yesterday, we did just the opposite. Although small business America said last November to this President and to this Senate, "Cut taxes," yesterday we said to small business America, "If you file as an individual, you are going to pay at least 5 percent more in your taxes, and we are also going to increase a variety of other taxes that will cost you a great deal more in doing business," in conducting the business that generates the jobs that fills the supermarkets' shelves, that generates the jobs again.

It is really a catch-22 that we find ourselves in from yesterday, and the rhetoric of yesterday, to the debate of the day. Yesterday, we said to small business America, "Dig deep into your pockets, because we are going to ask you to pay more. We are going to ask you to take the capital you otherwise would have used to expand the warehouse to extend the business and send it to the Congress so the Congress can send it forth in stimulus packages. We are going to cause you more difficulty in doing business."

One other thing, last November, small business said was, "Cut regulations. Please cut taxes and cut regulations. Untie us so that we can expand and grow and hire more from Main Street, America."

What am I hearing from this administration? A great deal more rhetoric about Government becoming a partner, a participant, a helping hand.

Mr. President, when Government becomes a partner, a participant, and a helping hand, I know what follows—the regulation book and the regulator.

Because wise Senators and Congressmen will want to rest assured that every dime they put forth in a helping hand must be spent in a prudent way. And the way you determine how prudent the expenditure is to send along a regulator to make sure of the prudence of the individual who is the recipient.

Aha, regulations. The very thing that small town America and small business America said we cannot have more of, the Clinton administration is proposing a good deal more of.

So that 2 of 5 things that small town, job-generating, small business America said "Don't do to us," we are now doing once again and, my guess is, Mr. President, with a great deal of energy.

They said, "Please do not impose health care costs upon us any greater than you are currently doing." And yet every day we hear, uttering forth from this administration, of Mrs. Clinton's effort to accumulate around her advisers to design a health care program for this country that employers must play an ever-increasing role in providing health care coverage for American citizens.

And, of course, the last thing that small business, small town America said in November—in a poll, now, not by anybody's guesstimation but in a national survey by the National Small Business United: Cut the Federal deficit. Please cut taxes. Please reduce the regulatory burden. Please do not impose any more health care costs on us. Fix the credit crunch, which our President is working on at this moment. But cut the Federal deficit. Do not drive us to the credit market where everyone else is, and where our Federal Government is the biggest borrower, and expect us to be able to compete.

We are not doing that. I know the rhetoric says it, but the rhetoric said it 4 years ago, and the rhetoric said it 6 years ago, and yet the deficits climbed, because this Congress in its judgment failed to recreate the environment in which we do business for the American people and the taxpayers. We failed in bringing about a balanced budget amendment, and we failed in bringing about a line-item veto, and therefore reconstructing a discipline of fiscal responsibility, a discipline that would have caused us to move as responsibly as the American people have asked us to move, toward a Federal balanced budget. I am very fearful yesterday's actions will say once again, as history has taught us, we have failed to meet the test of the true economic engine that drives this economy.

Today, Mr. President, we are here on the floor talking about all the good things we are going to do for America. Hallelujah, here comes the stimulus package and out of it will grow hundreds of thousands of jobs for working America. We heard my colleague from Iowa talking about the jobs that would occur in that State in the coming months. Let me read from the Des Moines Register of today, reflecting on that 115 million dollars' worth of tax-paying money that will go into the State of Iowa. Here is a reflection of one of the jobs, one of the jobs that will be created: $475,000 in emergency repairs to the historic Bruce More Manson in Cedar Rapids.

This mansion was built by an industrialist a good many years ago. I have not seen it but I have heard about it. It was given, through the National Historic Trust, to the citizens of Cedar Rapids some years ago for the purposes of cultural events, concerts, educational seminars and all of that.

Idaho taxpayers' dollars are now being transferred to the city of Cedar Rapids for the purpose of refurbishing a mansion that is the responsibility of the citizens of that city and not of the State of Idaho. Why should the citizens of the State of Idaho provide, for the city and the citizens of Cedar Rapids, the refurbishing of a beautiful old mansion on 26 acres? And we call that economic stimulus? I call that a transfer of wealth. But that is what is in this bill.

There is another project. It is an incinerator out there in Iowa to burn animal parts. That may be valuable, I do not know. I am not going to judge that for what it may or may not be worth. But that is what is in the package. I will allow the American citizens, in due time, to judge whether this economic stimulus package, at a time when our economy is really beginning to move, is right. I doubt that it is and I doubt very much if it is necessary.

Let me talk for a few moments, then, about what is going on in my State of Idaho, because I am very concerned at this moment that an economic stimulus package that will take money from my State and transfer it to another State is in fact not going to be very good for my taxpayers and the citizens of my State. Let me combine that rhetoric with an observation of what we did yesterday, because you cannot talk about tomorrow if you do not talk about today, and you cannot talk about today if you do not reflect on what happened yesterday.

From a budget resolution that sets forth for the coming year how much we will generate in revenues and where we will expend it, to a stimulus package today that says here is a kick-start to an economy that is beginning to move at a pretty rapid rate, let us try to put those in context for the State of Idaho. One thing is very clear in most instances. If you are a rural State, if you are a sparsely populated State, you end up being a giver, a provider, and not a recipient. That is generally the case, not in total, because there are some transportation dollars in here and there are some infrastructure dollars in here. But the bulk goes to urbanized America, to the "metropolises" of our country.

For Idaho in the coming year, based on the economic stimulus package and the economic recovery that was spoken to yesterday in the budget resolution, let me attempt in a brief moment to analyze its impact. Idaho is a rural State of 1,039,000 people. Agriculture is our biggest industry, although we have a rapidly growing high tech industry, a rapidly growing forestry industry, we have a beautiful State with a growing recreational industry. All that combines to give a vibrant and growing economy. Idaho has a very low jobless rate at this moment. Idaho is a place where people want to come and start their small businesses. Not only is it a nice place but it is a low-cost State. We do not tax people at high rates. We do not fit in Federal regulations, or State regulations, in a way that it encumbers businesses. As a result, people are wanting to come.

Here is what is going to happen when they get to Idaho in the coming year. They are going to be asked to pay a higher power rate because of a Btu tax that we incorporated into a budget resolution yesterday. It is at least a 5-percent increase in their utility rates. If they farm or if they ranch, they are going to be asked to pay increased fuel costs because of the Btu tax; and if they farm, $40 per acre more in phosphate fertilizers because of an increase in energy.

We have also found in the Pacific Northwest, because of a Btu tax, if you receive power from the Bonneville Power Administration, your power rates are going to go up. And we have 35,000 or 40,000 jobs that are clearly in question at this point because of Congress and a President who have said there is a better way to tax and that is to tax energy in this country.

I will tell my colleagues that Idaho, although they are not now the recipient of this stimulus package, may have to be asking for it in the coming years as this President and the budget resolution of a day ago begin to put them out of business. Hundreds of thousands of dollars, millions of dollars are flowing to the city of New York. At one point in the early economic stimulus package, there was as much flowing to New York as there were taxes flowing from Idaho: Over one-half billion dollars in stimulus to New York City. I know that has been cut down some but I thought it was an interesting comparison, Mr. President, because there was over one-half billion dollars in new taxes being proposed upon the citizens of the State of Idaho.

Is it not interesting? Again, a redistribution regionally in the wealth of this country. We are going to take it from Idahoans and give it to New York City. For what purpose?

Well, possibly for the patronage-style jobs that our President promised the big city mayors that helped him get elected. I know Idaho was not much of a help. We saw things differently in our State. And as a result, Idaho now, apparently, is being asked to pay a great deal through the new tax-and-spend program of the Clinton administration.

I thought it was interesting about an hour ago when the Senator from Massachusetts came and spoke of the economy of the State of Massachusetts, second only in difficulty, or in severity, to the State of California. Yet 4 years ago we heard the sounding and resounding sounds of a Massachusetts miracle, a government that was doing more for its people and generating more jobs—and a person coming from that government who wanted to do that for America—than any other State government, if not in this country, on the eastern seaboard.

And yet today, by the Senator's own remarks, the State of Massachusetts is in worse economic condition than it ever has been, and nearly a third of the unemployment in this country, or 30,000 of those, emanate from the State of Massachusetts. Oh, what a difference 4 years make if the Government policies that drive the economic program that create the jobs is the wrong policy.

I mention the growth in Idaho at this minute. Part of that growth comes from the State of California, frankly enough. The Senator from California is on the floor, and California is in rough economic shape at this moment. Many of the people who come to Idaho with their small businesses are coming from California, and when they get to Idaho, many of them tell me that the reason they come is because their cost of doing business by coming across the border into my State is dropped by 27 to 30 percent because the government burden, the regulations, and the taxes that they are walking away from in the State of California are significantly that much less in the State of Idaho.

Is it not ironic that economic growth begins to grow and blossom in areas where there is diminished regulation and diminished taxation? Yet yesterday, this Senate adopted a bill that is the largest tax package ever in the history of this country directed in so many ways at small-town and small-business America, directed at families, directed at the people who have been the economic engine that have driven this economy and built jobs and recreated jobs at a higher level than ever in the history of our country over the last decade.

We are at a very interesting time in our country's history: a crossroad, a path, a new path, a President who is saying invest in America. That investment, we find out, is higher taxes, higher Government regulations, and very possibly a much larger deficit in the years to come.

I wish I could support a stimulus package that generated true jobs, but by Director Panetta's own estimation, this package will generate about 219,000 or 220,000 jobs over the course of the summer. Last month the private sector, at no cost to the taxpayer, generated over 365,000 new jobs.

Well, those jobs that will be generated by this stimulus package are now up to an average cost per job of nearly $90,000. Let me suggest to you, Mr. President, and to the Senate, that that is by far the most unwise transfer of wealth. Why do we not create an economic environment that brings about the investment that we would all like to see that generates the kind of stimulus to our economy that allows the small business person to hire the extra person, expand the inventory to generate the economy that this country has been so well known for. That is not going to happen.

So let me suggest that one of the reasons you find little desire to come to the floor to amend or change this stimulus package is because there are a good many on my side who suggest that this is not the right kind of stimulus package. It does not bear tax cuts, it does not bear a reduction in regulation, it does not bear the kind of stimulus that will be long-term in its nature instead of short-term in its creation. That is reality.

So while the other side marches to the tune of a new President, wanting to provide for him the kind of leadership that he has spoken to, the kind of investment in America by taxing more and spending more, you will find very few on this side who are willing to participate because we recognize that the two single greatest problems in our country today are a Government that regulates too much and a Government that spends more than it has. The only way we truly will create long-term, high-paying jobs is to get Government out of the way of that economic engine out there known as the private sector.

Whether it is $16 billion to a $6 trillion economy, or whether it is no money at all, there is only one true way to generate job building in our country and, Mr. President, it is not embodied in H.R. 1335, the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1993.

My guess is that we will be able to point to this document 4 years from now and we will be able to find it on the bottom line. It will say this added just exactly that amount of money to the deficit. It will not have generated the kind of tax revenue in return of the type that we have heard talked to today by many of the speakers on the other side.

This will not reduce the deficit. The budget resolution yesterday was not the greatest deficit reduction document in the history of this country, as the Senator from Tennessee spoke to. It is, without question, the greatest tax increase that our Nation has seen. Time will only tell whether we here have truly answered the responsibility and the charge that the electorate gave us in November of this past year.

I read the charge as deficit reduction. I read the charge as changing this system here away from business as usual to a leaner Government that stepped out of the way of the private sector and allowed it to generate the kind of wealth that it could to bring down the deficit and to ensure a future for our young people.

I challenge the other party today to truly address that issue because, in my opinion, and I think in the opinion of the American people, they have failed in that challenge because their budget resolution and their stimulus package really do take us back to the old philosophy that they have held true for many decades, and that is to tax as much as they can and spend as much as they can and, in the end, produce the largest debt and the largest deficit in the history of this country.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mrs. FEINSTEIN] is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise to make some remarks about the President's stimulus package. I was very pleased to hear the remarks of the Senator from Idaho, who has a great and a glorious State. I know because I have had occasion to visit it.

But I would like to most respectfully say to the Senator, I bring the perspective of a Californian and a former big-city mayor. One of the things that I have learned in that time is that if we do not provide for our future, there is no future. If we neglect our cities and we neglect our people, we end up continually extending unemployment compensation.

And so, Mr. President, I come before this body today to indicate my strong support for the President's stimulus package. I believe that it is both an investment in the present as well as an investment in the future of this country. True, some of it will provide jobs and some of it will remedy a failing transportation and highway system. I wonder how many of us know that 40 percent of all of the bridges in this Nation are in a state of disrepair. I think it really takes a time when something like an earthquake brings down a freeway and kills 40 people for us to really begin to understand the impact of deferred maintenance, the impact of not being able to produce the kind of infrastructure that 250 million people in this Nation need.

Some of funding in this package will help to educate our children and, yes, put them to work during the summer. Some will keep them healthy through immunization programs. Some of it will provide necessary food to pregnant mothers.

This is a one-time infusion of funds utilizing this year the $16 billion of revenues authorized but not appropriated. In doing this, it creates a kind of stimulus which I believe, in conjunction with the lowered interest rates, can be very helpful in providing a level of confidence that is so necessary to get this economy pumping again.

Mr. President, I speak from the perspective of the largest State in this Union, where today 1.5 million people are unemployed—1.5 million people unemployed—a State which has not come out of the recession, and a State which would welcome the kind of economic stimulus which enables us not only to address our present but also to address our future.

So I am proud to support this program, Mr. President, because when it passes, we are going to be able to say we as a nation are investing in the future of this country once again. Mr. President, that is long overdue, and I only hope it is not too late.

There is one part, however, of this stimulus package that troubles me, Mr. President. I had intended to offer an amendment today which would have provided chapter 1 funds to assist in the education of children in States which have experienced growth in the number of poor children living there.

Let me explain. The economic stimulus package includes a $234.8 million allocation for chapter 1. These are moneys that go to help educate the poorest children among us. I had hoped that these moneys could be used to substantially mitigate the one-time effect of the 1980 census data which is used today, this year, to fund these programs.

So I would have offered an amendment which would have provided chapter 1 funds to assist in the education of children in States that have experienced growth. I would like to have seen a fair and equitable distribution of these funds, but because of the delay in using the 1990 census data, California, for example, will not receive approximately $150 million to help educate its children. Twenty-six other growth States are also affected.

I would like to quickly go over those States. They are Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Texas, Utah, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

Mr. President, these 27 States, because of the way hold-harmless moneys are distributed, do not get adequate funds to compensate them for the increased numbers of poor children. California, for example, already spends 40 percent of its State budget on education. We have a $10 billion State deficit, yet every day youngsters must try to learn in overcrowded classrooms. California has the largest classroom size in the Nation. These children do not have books. They are without materials. They are without means necessary to obtain a solid education.

So California, and at least 26 other State, desperately need these funds.

Between 1980 and 1990, California became home to an additional quarter of a million poor children. Since 1980, 60 percent of the growth of the Nation's poor children took place in California. The present 3-year delay in using updated census data has made the situation even more serious.

I intended to introduce an amendment today, but because of the way the amendment three is structured, that is impossible. Therefore, my staff and the staff of Senator KENNEDY, the chairman of the authorizing committee, have engaged in discussions as to how this might be remedied. I know that the Senator from Massachusetts understands how important this is to children of my State as well as the 26 other States that have had large increases in the numbers of poor children.

I have consulted extensively with Senator KENNEDY, the chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, and he has agreed to use his leadership to work with California and the other high-growth States on a number of strategies that will tend to alleviate this situation.

DISADVANTAGED STUDENTS IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. KENNEDY. I understand completely the tremendous growth of the number of disadvantaged students in California, and I commend the Senator's leadership in bringing the issue to the Senate's attention. It is very clear that the Congress cannot continue the present practice of updating the Chapter 1 allocations once every 10 years. The practice is disruptive for schools and unfair to districts in California and many other States. They have to wait too long before they have the resources to serve new students.

We have to remember that chapter 1 is not a fully funded program. On average, it serves only about 60 percent of eligible students, and in hundreds of districts it serves as few as 40 percent. In Boston, more than half of the eligible students are not served.

As a result, when the number of poor children rises nationwide, as it has in the last 10 years, and when that growth is concentrated in certain States, such as California, we end up taking money away from poor children in some States in order to give it to poor children in other States.

We cannot plan sound educational programs that way. Students should not have to wait years to get help. But neither should they have the rug pulled out from under them just when they may be benefiting from the current formula.

We have to solve both of these problems. We need to obtain information that is up to date, so we can target the program to serve disadvantaged children wherever they live, and deal with shifting patterns of concentration among the 50 States.

I understand that the Census Bureau has a proposal that it would like us to consider, and I look forward to working with the Senator from California during the next reauthorization to solve this problem. It is important for Massachusetts, for California, and for every other State. And it is important for disadvantaged children too.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. There is one provision in the chapter 1 formula that has softened the blow for California. We have such a large number of children with AFDC support that we have received about $17 million in additional funds. Is it the intent of the Senator from Massachusetts to continue that provision during the next reauthorization?

Mr. KENNEDY. It will be important to retain provisions that help States with rapid growth of poor children, and I will support keeping that provision in the formula. I will also support adding provisions to the formula that will help States with large numbers of children from families whose first language is not English. We need to find a way to give those students greater weight when we calculate the allocations.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. California has nearly 1 million children eligible for Chapter 1 services, and many of them have been in our system for several years without any help. Last year, the Education Department did not act quickly enough on the 1990 census data to use new numbers. We will have to wait nearly another whole year for help. What can be done about this?

Mr. KENNEDY. My goal would be to repeat what the Congress did the last time with new census data. In 1982, we began to shift funds to high-growth States, but we did it 2 years after the census, not 3, and losing States were held fully harmless. But that is more difficult to do now, since an extra year has passed.

Nevertheless, many of us asked the administration to hold all States fully harmless this year, in order to give school districts time to carefully plan how they will reduce services. Instead, the administration has proposed only a 92 percent hold-harmless solution. I support the President's economic stimulus package, because I agree that it is needed for the economy. But I hope that the administration will help us to solve both the 8-percent problem and the extra year problem.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Are there other efforts that can be undertaken together to address some of the needs of the disadvantaged youth in our country that might give immediate help to them?

Mr. KENNEDY. I share that concern, and I know that President Clinton does as well. In the Labor and Human Resources Committee, we have been examining the summer youth program to find ways to respond to the President's desire to target America's cities. We may be able to recommend a form of targeting, as we did last summer, to ensure that an adequate percentage of the funds goes to cities. I know that such targeting would have a beneficial effect on California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I look forward to working with the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee during the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary School Act to develop a new formula which will get these funds to children in need and provide the assistance necessary for a solid education.

Mr. President, I think we all know if any one of us were President of the United States today and faced with a similar situation, we might put forward a stimulus program that might differ in certain respects, but I think we also know deep in our hearts that the program President Clinton has put forward is a program that is forged by a man who has campaigned in every single State in this Union, who is familiar with the economy in every single State in this Union, and, by taking the tools available to him, which are limited, has attempted to fashion a program which deals with education, with jobs, and with economic stimulus in a way that can bring about the kind of confidence necessary to move this Nation onward.

I know it is not easy to do that, and I know there are many critics in this room, but I would say to those critics, if you have a better solution, put that program forward. We have not heard it. In the absence of that, let this program go ahead. Let it be tried. Let us begin to educate our youngsters and really create an investment in early childhood education. Let us fund a summer job program that this summer, in just a few months from now, can put more youngsters to work. Let us move ahead with transportation and highway funds to put people to work and to build the systems we need.

Let us say we are not going to again countenance death from measles, death from childhood diseases. In my own State, more than 30 children died in 1 year in the Central Valley from measles—measles. A disease that was wiped out when I was a child is now back as well as other diseases. So, immunization is key.

Let us provide needy women with food so that they can deliver healthy babies and so those babies will not be a weight on the health care system in the future.

So we need to support WIC, immunization, Head Start, and community development block grant moneys, Mr. President, which I administered for 10 years as mayor and made function to be able to create a stronger economy in my city. We funded redevelopment agencies with those moneys that built homes and commercial enterprises, which employed people, which provided people with ongoing jobs so that these programs could go forward.

So I hear those, the doubting Thomases, who would say, aha, if you give them community development block grant money they will use it on a golf course.

I say not so. We did not use community development block grant moneys on a golf course. We did not use economic development moneys for that kind of thing. But I will tell you the kind of thing we used them for. We took a blighted vacant area in San Francisco called the Fillmore Commercial Center, tried to attract a tenant into it, could not were able to use some of these Federal moneys to attract Safeway to come in as a linchpin tenant, and Safeway built a high-volume store there.

Shortly thereafter, apartments were built, a commercial office building was built, smaller stores, delicatessens, cleaners opened up around it, and the area is now a vibrant area.

Mr. President, I remember a lot of talk following the riot in Los Angeles. There was going to be urban aid; there was never any urban aid forthcoming. There were going to be new enterprise zones; there has been no enterprise zone legislation that would really help an area like South Central Los Angeles today.

I hope to submit it. We are working to rebuild Los Angeles, to be able to develop some new thoughts with respect to special economic zones that can really provide an opportunity for business and economic development in those areas.

But nothing has come forward in this Congress to help the cities of America, except this economic stimulus program proposed by the President of the United States.

So, Mr. President, I think it is time to get on with it. I think it is time for those of us that want to vote for that program to be able to do so. And when that vote comes, Mr. President, it will have my strong support.

Thank you, very much.

Mr. JEFFORDS addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, while the Senator from California is still in the Chamber, I would like to point out to her and to others that there will be differing opinions on her suggestion on the distribution of the funds relative to chapter 1, the educational system, and that I certainly will work with Senator KENNEDY and others. But I would point out that whereas she is desirous of increasing funds in California, that increase will come at the expense of some 26 other States who are very hard pressed by the fact that due to the census situation, even though we have had ourselves an increase in the number of poor children, we will be getting a substantial decrease of up to 20 percent in our funds.

So any time we get involved in these kinds of formula situations, we have to remember that perhaps for everyone that gains, there will be others that will lose. But I certainly look forward to working with her to see that we can take care of each of the individual States and the inequitable situations that may be arising, and hopefully work something out when we get to the chapter 1 funds.

Let me ask a specific question. It is my understanding that the Senator does not intend to offer an amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill to deal with this issue. Is that correct?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Yes. I am not going to introduce an amendment for the very real reason that it is not possible to do so and have it come to any real fruition. Instead, we have gone to the authorizing committee, to the chairman of that committee, and worked out a strategy to begin to deal with this in the future.

Mr. President, if I might just address the distinguished Senator's comments, it is not my intention to penalize the low-growth States. It is simply to say that we have a 3-year lag in the use of census data so that in this fiscal year we are using data that goes back 13 years. There is a 3-year lag time. That has created real jeopardy for many of the high-growth States. It needs to be addressed, I think, by a periodic rapid updating of the data, hopefully every year, so that the most accurate data—you would not want money to go where there are no students. The money should follow the needy students. That is what we hope to accomplish.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the Senator for her comments.

Mr. President, I am most willing to work, as ranking member on the Senate Subcommittee on Education, with the Senator from California.

Mr. President, as my colleagues know, I had offered an amendment to the budget resolution regarding research earmarks. Like many of my colleagues, I did not get an opportunity to debate or to have a vote on the amendment without the debate. I chose not to get a vote. I am not going to offer the amendment to this bill, but I would like to discuss it as it is relevant to appropriations and to our use of taxpayers' funds.

I am very concerned about a trend that threatens our country's scientific leadership. That trend is the increase in earmarking of research and development funds. As budgets get tighter, more and more institutions are seeking earmarks. The result is that a few benefit, but many suffer for not even having the ability to compete for these funds.

The administration has promised to renew emphasis on research, to have a renewed emphasis on research and development, but if we continue this trend of increasing earmarks, the emphasis on science will take a back seat to politics.

Then, Mr. President, what will we say to the aspiring research chemist, biologist, engineer, or mathematician? Do we tell them that if they sacrifice for a few years to get their bachelor's and graduate degrees, that we will provide opportunities for them for the future of our Nation, or do we tell them not to bother unless they plan to work through a politically connected institution? That is a question that concerns me.

If we are to maintain our standard of living, we must make new advances, new breakthroughs. We must foster new research and new ideas. At the same time, however, we must continue to cut spending. The funds available to support the research of our future, like all programs, are becoming more scarce as we strive to reduce the deficit.

The President has called for shared sacrifice. Everyone must help our country balance the budget. The question is what is the best way to rationally allocate these increasingly scarce resources? Many members think their own pet projects are the best way to do that. I understand that. However, I seriously question that method being utilized to the extent it is. I also believe that that approach is out of whack, has just gotten wild.

Last year, according to the President's Office of Science and Technology, Congress earmarked $1.7 billion in research funds. That is nearly equal to the entire budget of our legislative branch of Government. The $1.7 billion is over half a billion dollars more than the combined budgets of the House and Senate. Mr. President, I believe that such earmarking threatens our scientific leadership.

Before proceeding, let me plainly state for my colleagues that I am not opposed to all earmarking. There are times when it is appropriate. We have all, myself included, encountered those times. Thus, the amendment I had filed with the budget resolution was not a ban on earmarking. All it asked, and all I am asking, is that we reverse the trend and cap it. Earmarking of science has increased in a dramatic way. According to the President's Office of Science and Technology, it has doubled in 2 years. According to the Chronicle of Higher Education, earmarks of academic institutions have more than doubled, nearly tripled, in 2 years.

The total value of the academic earmarks for 1991 and 1992 nearly equals the value of all such earmarks for the entire decade of the eighties and in 1990, combined. In the 2 years preceding the current fiscal year, Congress earmarked more research than the cumulative total of the 11 preceding years. Clearly, research earmarking has gotten out of control. Let me illustrate, Mr. President, with a few charts.

Here is why I am so concerned about the earmarking issue and why I intend to continue to pursue this issue. The first chart shows the increase in non-competitive research and development funding in the last 3 years. It has more than doubled from $800 million to over $1.7 billion.

Common sense tells us that this trend should not and cannot continue. The President's Office of Science and Technology Policy estimates that we have already squeezed over $600 million of competitive R&D programs to make room for these earmarks. And the problem is getting worse. We have squeezed another $1.6 billion out of other programs to make room for the remaining R&D earmarks; $1.1 billion is roughly the entire budget of the House and Senate.

Let us look at the next chart. The trend is the same in academia. Earmarking has nearly tripled since 1990. In fiscal year 1992, the Chronicle of Higher Education estimates that earmarks total $684 billion. Tens of thousands of students could be given full scholarships for this amount of money. But, instead, a few are benefiting at the expense of many.

Mr. President, last year, the Congressional Research Service [CRS] did two reports detailing all of this earmarking. I would urge all my colleagues to get copies of the CRS reports but, unfortunately—and this is hard to believe—you cannot get these reports. Some of my colleagues, it seems, have intervened and prevented CRS from releasing the reports which show how bad this problem is. Here we are spending hour after hour debating cutting spending, and the response from Congress is to forbid the CRS to release reports we requested on just how many cuts in what people would call pork could be made.

Is this what the people expect from us? Unfortunately, I fear they may expect too much. This trend of earmarking has to stop, as it is becoming a vicious cycle. Let me explain with an example.

Last year, and again last month, a researcher from another State stopped into my office to say how deserving his program was of a special earmark. His center was so good he should not have to compete for funding. His program had all of the answers and would lead the way to a brighter future for the Nation, and probably the world. His program had all of the answers, and he should not have to compete for money. His program was too good for that. No, instead, each year Vermonters and the residents of other States should pay millions of their hard-earned tax dollars to support this center, where Vermont students would have to pay much more to attend than a student from his State would.

Imagine my office's reaction. Here was somebody from another State in my office telling us how the funds should be taken out of programs for which the University of Vermont could compete and be given to a school in another State.

Was this individual's own State willing to invest in the center? No. Is this individual willing to compete with other schools for the money? No. But does this individual want your constituents' tax money to pay for a program he knows is not good enough to win a competition and which even his own State will not invest in? You bet he is. Mr. President, this is absurd.

The more we earmark funds, the more we are telling other academics to take the same approach. The emphasis then shifts from fostering new ideas to fostering new political connections.

We have to put the emphasis back on rewarding new ideas and hard work and give our researchers equal shots for the money. I understand there are, from time to time, critical issues that require a prompt response. As several of my colleagues know, what I am most concerned about is the proliferation of so-called research centers and the earmarks for mortar and bricks. These centers are not short-lived studies designed to address the critical issue. They are often just a euphemistic name for an academic entitlement program. Every year, they come back for more money.

The question I had is, given that spending must be curtailed, does it really make sense to create a new entity each year that must be given its cash infusion to continue its operation? I do not think so, and I hope the majority of my colleagues will agree when I offer this amendment some time later this year.

Academics have long complained of the publish or perish aspect of the job. We are making it worse by changing publish or perish to pork barrel or perish. This is a big picture, Mr. President. Let me narrow the focus a little and talk about EPA's budget.

Look at this chart, and it will emphasize what we are talking about. There has been much talk about the issue of unfunded mandates. I, myself, raised this issue in the last Congress with respect to the environmental mandates. Our small towns are being devastated by an ever-increasing number of mandates for which they have little hope of ever-finding revenues to pay for these mandates.

Unlike some, however, I argued for flexibility, not across-the-board roll-backs of regulations. We should not punish those who cannot afford compliance, but neither should we expose others to unnecessary risks.

The issue of unfunded mandates is very important. Allow me to highlight why some important protections remain unfunded. Out of EPA's budget alone, nearly $154 million was earmarked for various research and development projects. And $122 million of this was allocated by our colleagues in the House primarily for mortar and bricks; $154 million, or even $122 million, would buy a lot of environmental protection with a considerable amount of money left over for competitive research, if it was distributed to areas that need the funds for prevention of environmental problems.

This is why I offered an amendment to the appropriations bill for the EPA last year to prohibit this noncompetitive funding in the future. The Senate passed this amendment with the support of our colleagues on the Appropriations Committee, which I am very thankful for. Unfortunately, the House did not concur and resisted efforts by Congressman BROWN to force a vote on this issue.

Let me graphically show my colleagues what the trend on earmarks for mortar and bricks has been out of EPA's budget. Last year, there was a huge jump in such earmarks—an $85 million jump.

Before we start trying to roll back environmental protection as a means to address the unfunded mandate problem, I suggest we look at what we are funding. How can we tell our local officials we have no money to help them when we have taken over $120 million out of EPA's budget to pay for various earmarks instead of building new drinking water or wastewater treatment plants?

All I had asked with my amendment is that we reserve this trend. As budgets get tighter, we must protect funds available for competitive research and for protection programs. We cannot sacrifice the benefits that come from rewarding the best ideas, the best record of accomplishment, for political gain.

We need the new technology to spur our growth, create new jobs, and help pay off the debt.

Yes, there will be times when it is appropriate to earmark funds. But no one can tell me that the number of situations has doubled or tripled in the last 3 years. It has not. My suggestion was that, for starters, we ask each of the appropriations subcommittees to drop back to the lesser of the 1991, 1992, or 1993 levels. That would reduce the number of earmarks by $1 billion. This is $1 billion that could be used for competitive bids, to ease cuts in other areas, and contribute to deficit reduction. We might not need so much stimulus right now with respect to the bill itself.

I also ask that those who have intervened to prevent CRS from their important work on this subject to withdraw their objections. All Members should have a right to know what is happening in this area.

I thank my colleague for their patience and, hopefully, you will give serious consideration to supporting me when I offer my amendment.

I yield the floor, Madam President, and I suggest that absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. Madam President, I want to record my strong support for the President's stimulus and investment program, and to urge swift passage of H.R. 1335, the supplemental appropriations bill.

Although my own State receives only a very modest share of the total—only about three-tenths of 1 percent, which is not far from the ratio that Rhode Island's population bears to the national total—the $50 million which we would receive will mean a great deal to our corner of the Nation.

My State, and indeed all of New England, is still very much in the grip of acute economic distress. We in Rhode Island are just emerging from a crisis brought on by the failure of our banking system. The impact of defense cutbacks already has resulted in layoffs by the defense contractors who have been our largest employers. Credit is short, consumer confidence is low and jobs are in short supply.

The infusion of some $50 million from the President's stimulus package will do much to help jump-start our local economy so that we will be poised to take advantage of a new era of national economic growth. Rapid funding for highway construction, community development, summer jobs, water and sewer projects and other worthy public programs will surely do much to raise the level of overall economic activity.

In addition to the very real favorable impact which this bill can have for New England and other parts of the country, there is another reason which argues powerfully for passage of H.R. 1335 as reported as promptly as possible, and that is the importance of this stimulus package as an economic bridge to the new era of fiscal reality upon which we are about to embark.

The fact is that the deficit reduction plan that we just approved in the budget resolution for 1994 needs to have a resilient economic base in order to be effective. Reduced Government spending and necessary increased taxation could tend to slow down the economy unless there is a momentum in place to take up the slack.

The stimulus and investment supplemental bill can provide that momentum. In effect, it will inoculate the economy for the shock which lies ahead when we start trying to live within our means. It deserves to be passed intact and passed promptly.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I congratulate the distinguished senior Senator from Rhode Island for his excellent statement, and I thank him.

Madam President, I just received a press release put out by the Department of Agriculture today—

Secretary of Agriculture Mike Espy said today an all-time high number of Americans received food stamps in January, proving the need to take steps to stimulate the economy.

According to figures released today by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, 26.83 million Americans received food stamps in January, a 213,000 increase from December 1992. These figures represent the highest-ever level of participation since the program originated in 1964.

Now I quote from the release.

"The need for food assistance has risen so rapidly that one in ten Americans received food stamps this January. Unfortunately, that's a new record that even beat the previous high set in December," Espy said.

"These new numbers demonstrate this recovery is toothless because it has carried with it no major increase in jobs or family income. Despite a few hopeful signs, food-stamp participation continues to grow. To create jobs, Congress must pass President Clinton's economic stimulus package.

"American families can't wait for some mythical economic cycle to improve—they need immediate action from their government. They need change right now," Espy said.

The recession of 1990-91 and a weak economy since then have brought millions of people onto the food stamp program. Over eight million people have been added to the program since January 1989, with over 4.8 million added since January 1991. Nearly 1.8 million more people received food stamps this January than the previous January.

Mr. President, I have read the release by the U.S. Department of Agriculture into the RECORD exactly as it is written.

ECONOMIC STIMULUS BILL

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Madam President, we have just completed action on the budget resolution, the legislation that acts as our basic outline for the bills implementing the President's economic proposals that will come later. The economic stimulus bill now before us is the first major step toward turning that outline into law. I want to talk about the stimulus package, how important it is to our country, and how it fits into the overall economic strategy we are pursuing. Before doing that, however, I first want to go back to the budget resolution on which we just completed action. I want to talk about it not just in terms of the numbers, but in terms of what those numbers mean to real people, and what they mean to the future of our country.

In 1980, Ronald Reagan rolled to election victory by asking people whether they were better off that year than they were 4 years earlier. There have now been three full Presidential terms since Reagan asked his famous question, and it is time it was asked again: "Are you better off now than you were 12 years ago?" I think the American people decisively answered that question in the 1992 elections; the budget resolution is part of the process of putting their answer into effect.

We spent 7 days and cast 46 rollcall votes on the budget resolution, including over 18 rollcall votes on amendments that no one had seen and which had never been debated.

I am sure there are many people who think we must have lost our minds to conduct business in that way; I have already been asked by constituents: "How can Senators possibly vote responsibly on amendments they have never even seen?"

I think there are two answers to that question, Madam President. Looking at the issue narrowly, the answer is, of course, that it is bizarre to conduct the peoples' business this way. But there is another answer to give, and it is this: "The Senate appeared chaotic because there was and is a lot at stake in the budget resolution, and because the process of change is not automatic—it is very, very difficult."

The Senate has had a contentious week; at times, tempers were short. In my view, however, no one should let the turmoil involved in the legislative process blind them to the fact that something very significant has been accomplished—we have made a start on the process of change, and we are getting our domestic house in order.

The budget resolution we just passed is designed to around a number of important principles. I would like to take a moment to comment on just two of them.

First, this budget really does put people first. It changes our budget priorities in order to address real problems that are important to my constituents and to Americans across the country. And, equally importantly, it is based on the truth about where we are as a national family, and where we want to go.

I have a lot of Illinoisans who ask me why we cannot balance the budget tomorrow. After all, this is over $1½ trillion dollar government. I often hear from people who are sure that we ought to be able to fund enough savings to balance the budget without increasing taxes.

One of the reasons the budget resolution debate was so difficult is that myths die hard. We all want to reduce the budget deficit. We all know we have to reduce it. The battle is a battle of myth versus reality.

The mythology is that we should be able to balance the budget by freezing or reducing domestic discretionary spending, or perhaps domestic discretionary spending and defense spending together.

The reality is far different. First, domestic discretionary spending was only $195 billion in 1991, which means it could be eliminated entirely and not balance the budget. Further, domestic discretionary spending has actually fallen as a percentage of our gross domestic product, from 4.9 percent of GDP in 1979 to 3.7 percent of GDP in 1991; that represents a cut of close to 25 percent. And that means that we are now much less able to address compelling domestic needs, like education, than we were in 1979. I ask the question, are we better off now than we were in 1979?

While discretionary spending was falling, however, overall spending was rising. Total Federal Government spending rose from 20.7 percent of GDP in 1979 to 23.5 percent of GDP in 1993. That growth can be attributed to two main factors, interest expense, and entitlements—principally Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid. Interest expense almost double during the 1979 to 1991 period, rising from 1.8 percent of GDP to 3.4 percent of GDP. Entitlement spending rose from 11.2 to 13.3 percent of GDP over the same period.

While that was happening, however, total Government income as a percentage of GDP actually fell, ending up at 18.7 percent of GDP in 1991. And what that means is that every single dollar of growth of government in the last decade was financed by borrowing. Americans are paying the price for that strategy now with lower economic growth, less job creation, longer periods of unemployment, stagnant or even declining wages, and a general loss of international competitiveness for the U.S. economy.

In short, Madam President, we borrowed our way into a deep, deep hole, and we must have change to come out of it.

Now, it is true that the growth of Social Security and Medicare has been fully financed. The Social Security trust fund, in fact, is running surpluses of $80 billion and more every year.

The taxes that produce that surplus, however, have created pressure to lower Federal income taxes, and as a result, the individual income tax revenue dropped to 8.3 percent of GDP in 1991. And every other major tax category—corporate income taxes, excise taxes, estate taxes—also dropped as a percentage of GDP. Only social insurance taxes increased by that measure.

To put it in more human terms, 75 percent of all Americans pay more in Social Security and Medicare taxes than they pay in income taxes. And what that means is that, while the Social Security fund is experiencing larger and larger surpluses—which are needed to handle retirements in the next century—most of the general part of government, excluding interest expense, is shrinking. And even as it shrinks, it faces larger and larger deficits.

The budget resolution recognized these hard realities. It calls for modest changes in domestic discretionary spending patterns—cutting some programs and increasing others—to meet the backlog of problems that have for too long been unresolved. It increases revenues to support general government, because we simply cannot continue to spend large amounts more than we take in.

The decisions it requires are tough ones, but they are built around the principles of fairness, and attention to the needs of ordinary Americans.

What is more, it is a budget designed with an eye on the future. Its priority is to put Americans to work, to help them to work smarter, and to make the United States more competitive in world markets.

The merit of this plan can be seen in one compelling statistic—the fall of the long-term interest rates by over 1 percent since last November's election. This plan produces lower interest rates, and lower interest rates save homeowners literally hundreds of dollars per month. This budget resolution makes it cheaper for businesses to make new investments—and new investments means new jobs.

What is more, Madam President, this budget resolution will help ensure continued low inflation. Inflation hurts every American, as we all know, and hurts Americans of modest means most of all.

And that is the second point I want to make about the resolution, Madam President; it puts people first. It sets priorities that are ordinary people's priorities. Their concerns, and their needs, are what drive this budget plan.

Recently, I was at a hearing where Laura Tyson, the President's Chief Economic Adviser, appeared. She made the point that:

A high-tech America requires a work force that has the skills and training that are needed to use the new technologies. The U.S. educational system from kindergarten through college must be modified to meet these new requirements if American workers are to be able to compete in the world economy with rising rather than falling wages.

I could not agree more. Education must be among our top priorities, and education has a direct relationship to the success of our economy in general and to the prosperity of American workers in particular. That is why I am so pleased that the budget resolution allows the Federal Government to do more for education from preschool years, by allowing for full funding of Head Start, right through adulthood, with life long learning initiatives.

The budget resolution also provides for increased Federal funding to rebuild deteriorating roads, bridges, sewer systems, and mass transit lines. It provides money to help our cities, our neighborhoods, and our rural areas that have not seen any sign of economic recovery. It expands access to capital for those that are now shut out of our financial system, and moves our economy out of the cold war toward greater global competitiveness.

It foreshadows the health care reform debate that is to come. We all know we cannot allow health care costs to continue escalating at current rates. The last 2 years, Medicare expenses grew over 14 percent per year, and Medicaid grew at over 30 percent per year. We now spend over 14 percent of our gross domestic product on health care, and that will increase to over 18 percent of gross domestic product by the turn of the century unless we act.

These are cold, abstract numbers. But what they mean is continued increasing health care costs for Americans, more and more Americans without any health care, and more and more Americans terrified of the possibility that they will have to change jobs and, in the process, lose the ability to get health coverage for existing medical conditions.

The health care reform debate will take another major step forward when the President makes his recommendations in early May. However, the budget resolution recognizes that there is no real long-term deficit reduction strategy that can work without fundamental health care reform, and by making that fact clear, it will help us to achieve further deficit reduction in future years through the right kind of health care reform.

The budget resolution will help improve the lives of working Americans, but, as I stated earlier, it took a long time to create the hole we are in, so it is going to take a while to climb out of that hole.

That is why the economic stimulus package now before us is so important. It provides a first boost up the ladder, if you will, to get us started on that climb.

The need for stimulus is compelling, Madam President. While it is true that the recession has officially ended, its effects are still being felt by millions of Americans. If this recovery were like prior recoveries, we would be creating something like 300,000 jobs per month. This time, however, we are only creating jobs at one-tenth of that level—and that is compelling evidence that the economy still needs a push.

Now, there has been a lot of criticism of this stimulus package, but I think that criticism is misplaced.

Some argue that we should not have a stimulus package—that it increases the deficit and therefore we shouldn't do it—but one-fourth of the spending in this bill is for extending long-term unemployment benefits. Is there anyone who really believes that this is the time to wreck the unemployment insurance safety net? I do not think any American believes that would be a good idea.

Some argue that the stimulus package is too large, but even when it is enacted, spending for this year will be below the level agreed to by President Bush in the 1990 budget agreement. I hardly think that makes this package a reckless exercise.

This stimulus bill is about creating jobs—now—and about beginning the process of changing our domestic priorities—now.

Frankly, I do not understand why a modest package like this one is so criticized, but tax cuts that increase the deficits are seen as good things.

The tax cuts in the 1980's helped wealthy Americans the most. And spending cuts in that decade hurt ordinary Americans the most. They hurt children; they hurt the sick; they hurt those that need job opportunity; they hurt average working Americans that really don't ask for much.

Wealthy Americans supported the tax cuts and supported the spending cuts—largely, I think, because spending programs benefit only ordinary Americans, and low-income Americans, and disadvantaged minority Americans. But that self-interest of those who have the most cannot and should not be allowed to control our economic policy decisions.

We have a lot of problems facing this country, Madam President. We have deteriorating roads and bridges, and sewers systems. We have an education system that disadvantages Americans in increasingly tough international competition. We have housing problems; we have urban problems; and we even have problems in something as basic as getting our children immunized against common diseases.

The stimulus package contains provisions that get us started on addressing these problems, and does so in a way that maximizes job creation, and maximizes the boost the spending gives to our economy.

It seems to me that the case for the path we are embarked on is a compelling one, Madam President. The budget resolution and this stimulus package are aimed at making things better for ordinary Americans. Ordinary Americans did not do very well in the eighties. They saw their incomes erode, even as more and more families had to become two-income families to make ends meet. They saw their children have more difficulty in getting good jobs. They saw their own job security erode. More and more saw the dream or home ownership eroding.

Unlike wealthy Americans, their taxes did not go down in the last decade. Unlike wealthy Americans, their incomes did not go up. The average American spent the last decade working harder and harder to bring home less and less—and that is fundamentally what we are trying to change.

We are trying to create good jobs, jobs a person can raise a family on, and jobs that will be there tomorrow. We are trying to create a climate where ordinary Americans will see their incomes start to grow again. We are not saying that Government will provide for everyone, but we are trying to ensure that Government gives people the chance to help themselves—because if people have half a chance to build a better life, there is no doubt that they will take it.

I want to take a moment to tell a little story that I think really illustrates that point.

I went home a couple of weeks ago and attended a function in Chicago. A woman came up to me. She was well dressed and professional in every way and she said to me "You know, I would like very much to thank you for what you did many years ago."

I did not know this person. So I did not know what she was talking about.

She said, "You passed a bill while you were in the State legislature that allowed people who are on public aid, people who are on welfare, to get credit for attending school, so that their college hours could be credited against the work requirement in the State welfare program."

She said "I was on public aid at the time, Ms. Braun, but I went to school because of that bill and now I am working on my master's degree, my family is together, we are buying a home, and I thought I would never get a chance to meet you to tell you thank you for that."

I have to tell you, I was choked up at that point, Madam President. Quite frankly, it made me feel that being involved in this legislative process really did have meaning. But as much to the point, seeing that woman who had taken the opportunity to provide for herself made me know once again that if you give people a chance, if you give people an opportunity, if you give people the option of working, you give them some hope, that people will go out and take that hope and go forward and will take care of themselves. And that will make our country better and more productive in the long run.

Madam President, the last decade was an experiment in trying to budget mythology into a reality. It was a failure. It had to fail because the myths were just not proven true. This plan, this stimulus plan, is based on the world as it is, rather than the world that those few Americans who benefited the most in the last decade might wish it was. This plan can work, but it can only work if we enact it into law, and that is what I believe we must do. We should pass this stimulus bill now, Madam President, and get about the business of acting on the rest of the President's package.

For us to wait any longer is to deny our opportunity, our chance, to change the direction to make our country great again, to give our country the solid footing that we will need to go into the 21st century.

I thank you, Madam President.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, we have reached a situation which is unusual in some respects, not in others. We have been on this bill now for approximately 1 full day, spanning 2 calendar days, and no amendments have been offered, although many Senators have suggested that they intend to offer amendments. Despite our best efforts, we have been unable to persuade anyone to actually offer amendments.

Under those circumstances—since I have previously notified Members of the Senate in writing that under our schedule there would be no votes after 3 p.m. on Friday, and that hour having been reached—I now announce that there will be no votes today.

In my letter to Senators setting forth the schedule for this legislative period—and that letter was sent out several weeks ago—I advised that there would be no rollcall votes on any of the previous Mondays but that a possibility of votes did exist for this coming Monday, and I repeated that several times orally here on the Senate floor.

So it is my intention now that the Senate will return to session at noon on Monday to resume consideration of this measure, and it is my hope that there will be votes on Monday, that we will be able to have Senators who say they want to offer amendments to actually offer them so we can begin the substantive voting on this measure.

I have also said many times publicly—and I want to repeat it here now because it is becoming increasingly relevant—that the Senate is scheduled to conclude this legislative period and begin the Easter recess at the close of business next Friday, April 2, and that remains my intention and my goal. But I have stated on many occasions—and now repeat—that we will leave if we have completed the schedule of business which has been before the Senate for some time. That includes the budget resolution, the pending measure, the economic stimulus package, and the extension of the debt limit.

At one time I hoped that we might actually do all of those things prior to April 2 and that we would be able to, therefore, conclude this legislative period in advance of the scheduled time. That appears to be increasingly unlikely and another example more of my continuing naivete than anything else, but I have not given that up completely if events turn in a way that cannot now be foreseen.

So I want to remind Senators and repeat so there can be no question about it, I repeat what I have said on many, many occasions, we will not leave for the Easter recess until we complete the business that the American people expect us to complete during this legislative period—those are the measures to which I have referred.

Finally, I restate that, with respect to Monday, the Senate will come into session at noon. I am unable to predict with certainty at this time when a vote will occur or how many will occur because I do not know if or when anyone will offer an amendment. But Senators have been on notice in writing for several weeks and orally for that period as well that votes are possible on Monday, and that remains the case.

Madam President, there being no other Senator seeking recognition at this time, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for morning business during which Senators be permitted to speak herein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, we are in morning business; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I hope I do not speak longer than 5 minutes. In fact, I would ask the Chair to advise me when I have used 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be happy to do so.

SPENDING REDUCTIONS

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I rise because yesterday, at the end of the budget resolution, Senator DOLE had made some remarks about the deficit and fiscal policy and the distinguished majority leader got up and made some remarks.

As I recall, one of the statements that the majority leader used was a summary of what he said were spending reductions.

He said the Senate-passed budget resolution had spending reductions of $332 billion.

I could not believe that because I had not seen anything like that from our calculations, so I went back and said, "What is this? Explain it. Let me see if I can do that."

In that $332 billion in gross spending reductions, $105 billion is from defense, $172 billion from domestic, and interest savings of $55 billion, for a total of $332. However, Madam President, the majority leader used a CBO uncapped spending baseline and excluded the domestic spending increases. If I diagnose the gross $172 billion claimed spending cuts correctly, it translates into only $7 billion in real, net spending cuts as follows:

A domestic spending baseline difference of $7 billion. Savings we have already achieved from the 1990 budget agreement.

Calling $18 billion in fees domestic cuts. I do not think anybody out there in America thinks when you impose a fee on a rancher or on a mining interest or on somebody using SEC, that is a spending cut.

Then this budget says we are paying interest on our national debt but we propose to have a new policy so we will pay less interest. It suggests we are going to change the mix of long- and short-term bonds, and that is plugged in to save $16 billion in interest costs.

Then what is forgotten in that $332 billion gross spending cut is that the resolution asks for spending increases of $124 billion. The way we calculate that is very, very simple. The total spending reductions—that is, reductions that we are doing something about—amount to the defense savings of $75 billion and the net savings on all of domestic of $7 billion, and all of the rest comes from user fees, reclassification of interest, and, yes, adding $124 billion in new expenditures.

I am going to put the table in the RECORD. I do not really think it can be refuted.

I am going to try to recap it my way. This table seems to put down everything the majority side is contending and puts it down perhaps in a different column. But essentially we are right back where we started.

From our standpoint, these cuts amount to $7 billion in all of domestic for 5 years. On the domestic side that is all the cuts there are, net. All the rest of the so-called reductions are either defense, fees, or interest, which we reduce because we claim we are getting the deficit down so much with new taxes that we save on interest. So when we are all finished with this and we really come down to what is coming home to roost, it might be surprising to everyone that we have not cut domestic spending at all—$7 billion—while the majority leader talks about reducing spending $332 billion.

I really believe if you want to add up the columns, you will find that these numbers are right. That is what we have been talking about all these days, that you should not put this big tax of $295 billion on without having dramatically reduced domestic spending. That is what that vote was about, the Nunn-Domenici vote. We had 48 votes. That was an effort on the part of that group of Senators to say there are no real, permanent, domestic cuts. So why do we not take on the mandatory entitlement programs and do something for the taxpayers of the country so we are not just taxing them and not getting any domestic reductions?

With that, I conclude one more time that it seems to this Senator that one can wish all they want about a better day and a new plan, but when you have our kind of economy, if the new plan imposes onerous burdens on business, makes them less competitive, then you are not going to get from that plan what you wish, which is a vibrant, growing, job-producing economy.

If I thought this was going to work, I would be here arguing as much as I have in favor of it. But I do not believe a plan with that much new taxes, that little permanent reduction in domestic spending, is really going to work.

I ask unanimous consent the table I spoke of be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIFFERENCES IN CLASSIFICATION OF SPENDING REDUCTIONS

EXCELLENT WORK BY THE REPUBLICAN STAFF

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, yesterday the Senate adopted a budget resolution for the upcoming fiscal year. More work lies ahead on the conference report and the ensuing reconciliation bill. Clearly Republicans did not support the resolution adopted yesterday and will not support the conference agreement likely to be presented to the Senate next week. In support or opposition, however, staff work is required on both sides to see to it that the schedule is met and the message is communicated in words, charts, amendments, and substitutes.

First, I want to thank the Republican leader's staff: Howard and Elizabeth Green and their excellent floor staff for their help this last week keeping us on the budget resolution. Also, the Republican Policy Committee staff, under the leadership of Kelly Johnson, kept Senators and their offices informed throughout the week-long debate.

My congratulations also go out to Mr. Larry Stein and his majority staff in their strong support to the chairman and the majority leader throughout last week's debate.

Obviously, he was of great support for the other side. He is a professional and does a great job.

Finally, I am very indebted to the Budget Committee staff on the minority side, headed by Bill Hoagland. He is a master. Everyone around here trusts him, and he is everybody's friend and supplies assistance to everyone on our side. I even think sometimes the other side asks Bill Hoagland for information, if not advice.

There is a large group of staff that helped and put a lot of hours in on our side:

GOP BUDGET COMMITTEE STAFF

Bill Hoagland, Staff Director;
Carole McGuire, Appropriations;
Austin Smythe, Energy and Budget Process;

Cheri Reidy, Economist and Revenues;
Peter Taylor, Economist;
Anne Miller, Budget Review;
Bob Stevenson, Communications;
Charlie Flickner, International;
Denise Ramonas, Counsel;
Jim Capretta, Health and Social Security;
Lynne Daghighian, Income Security and Unemployment;
Roy Phillips, Defense;
Lisa Morin, Education;
Ricardo Rel, Agriculture;
Melissa Longoria, Veterans and Tracking;
Kevin Mitchell, Justice and Support Staff;
Andre Gatta, Support Staff;
Betsy Paul, Support Staff; and Mieko Nakabayashi, Support Staff.

I thank them all and now I say to them—get back to work.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

CLINTON TRADE

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I rise today in defense of President Clinton's trade policy.

In recent days, the newspapers have been full of stories saying that President Clinton does not have a trade policy. For example, an article in the March 25 Wall Street Journal says, "U.S. trade policy lurches between confusion and contradiction." Last week-end's Washington Post carried a similar opinion piece.

Frankly, Madam President, I am astonished by these articles. Perhaps these journalists missed the speech President Clinton gave at American University several weeks ago. To me, the President's message is clear. He wants freer and fairer trade for America. And he wants to coordinate our domestic and trade policies to keep our Nation competitive.

As the saying goes, there is more than one way to skin a cat. And there is more than one way to achieve freer and fairer trade.

The right approach to exporting more semiconductor chips to Japan, for instance, may not be the best way to handle an import problem over Japanese-made sports vehicles. Or to encourage European governments to buy more U.S. goods.

To suggest that the same approach should always be taken is remarkably naive. Perhaps that works in economics textbooks, but it does not work in real life. Disputes that potentially cost U.S. exporters millions of dollars in lost trade deserve more than a cookie-cutter approach.

I guess what really bothers these journalists—or should I say, the unnamed former Bush administration officials quoted in their articles—is that President Clinton has not raised an ideological banner, something I would like to talk about.

Madam President, I have watched the Republican administrations of the past 12 years preach the message of free trade and the magic of the marketplace. But their record reflects something quite different. President Reagan gave us import quotas on autos and steel—hardly free-trade policies. President Bush renewed import quotas on machine tools and a market share semiconductor agreement with Japan.

I am not criticizing all these actions—I happen to support the semiconductor agreement, for example—but they were not free trade by any stretch. They were pragmatic actions taken behind an ideological smoke-screen.

Madam President, let us applaud our new President for not hiding behind a smokescreen. Let us applaud him for considering all the options. Let us rally behind him as he works to resolve the complexities of trade policy in a world where 19 percent of all United States exports are made here by Japanese-owned companies, and where General Motors Corp. is the largest investor—in Mexico.

And let us applaud our President for being clever. The Wall Street Journal would criticize him for taking unpredictable zigzags in trade negotiations. But do we really want to be predictable as we sit down to negotiate with our trading partners? Do we want them to know exactly what we will do—and when? Or do we want to keep them guessing and get the best deal for our exporters? You decide.

Madam President, I think President Clinton and his trade team are doing a good job. Ambassador Kantor, in particular, is to be commended for his tenacity and his quick mastery of trade issues. I look forward to working with them to open the world's markets to more U.S. exports, in coordination with a stronger domestic economic policy.

Madam President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORTON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE PATIENT MUST COME FIRST

Mr. GORTON. Madam President, the primary goal of health care reform is to assure affordable quality health care for all American families. Our country can no longer afford the staggering human and economic costs of our current health care financing system.

I listened intently for the past 2 years to the people of the State of Washington. Their message is clear. We do not want just any kind of health care reform, we want the right kind. I am convinced that we can achieve the right kind of reform only if we are willing to listen. For the past 2 years I have been doing just that. While many demanded a solution or insisted on immediate comprehensive and dramatic change, I insisted on hearing what people in the real world outside the beltway thought of our health care problems and their ideas of reform.

After countless town hall meetings across the State, and fruitful discussions with the people of Washington State, I should like to take this opportunity to explain fully my approach to health care reform which I believe to be in the best possible interests of the Nation and to the people of my own State.

We are all too familiar with the distressing statistics of figures that appear in the headlines every day. Sadly, they provide us with a clear illustration of the defects of our current system.

The number of people who lose their health care insurance climbed by 100,000 every month. Currently, almost 37 million Americans—and 700,000 Washingtonians—are uninsured. Out of every $1 Americans spent in 1990, 14 cents was for medical care. Every year our Nation spends more than $880 billion on health care, and that figure is expected to reach an appalling $1.1 trillion by 1995. While medical inflation slowed in 1991, it was still more than double the overall inflation rate.

Public health care programs will soon eclipse all other Government spending and will be the leading contributor to our increasing national debt. If we can limit the growth of Medicare and Medicaid to that of Social Security, incredibly we could balance the budget without any new tax increase or spending cuts within the next 5 years.

While the national economic cost of health care is mind-boggling, in my own State, the human and economic costs of the current health care system are felt every day from Bellingham to Clarkston, and Aberdeen to Spokane. It is here where the national health care crisis hits most at home and you can hear the concerns and fears that echo throughout these communities.

(Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN assumed the chair.)

Mr. GORTON. If we inside the beltway limit our debate to terms such as "health expenditures as a percentage of the gross national product" or "global budgeting schemes," but fail to listen to the people who confront it in real-life terms every day, we cannot expect to understand the true nature of our Nation's health care problem. Like the doctor whose success is built on his ability to listen to patients who accept his diagnoses and prescriptions, we must also use our best bedside manner and listen to the people whom we will ask to accept our prescription.

Listen to the Boeing worker in Everett who just received a layoff notice. The fears about his future employment prospects are heightened by his concern over the health insurance costs for himself and his family while he is out of work. He prays that no serious illness will befall his family while he is looking for work. For the first time, he is faced with the realization that there may not be a safety net to rely upon.

Listen to the working mother in Seattle who cannot find health insurance because her pregnancy is considered a preexisting condition.

Listen to the retiring primary care physician in Okanogan County who has seen his income drop while his caseload has increased. Like any business, the practice that he loved could only survive by providing only a limited percentage of uncompensated care. Outside of jeopardizing his own financial well-being, his departure leaves an enormous void in the rural community.

Their health care was costly before he left, but now many face the possibility of illness as a financial crisis that is compounded by the additional costs of getting to a major city to get help.

Listen to the midlevel manager in downtown Bellevue who desperately wants a career change. Because she is under treatment for a nonlethal disease, she fears that she will not be able to find another health insurance plan that covers her needs. Instead, she stays in a deadend job solely because of the difficulty of finding health insurance. The resulting joblock is a direct consequence of the nonportable nature of her health insurance.

Listen to the obstetrician in Pasco who is considering another career, despite her invaluable contribution to her community. The malpractice insurance premiums and the additional tests and procedures she must order to avoid liability have taken their toll. She and other physicians work in a constant state of concern that their livelihood and passion could fall victim to an aggressive trial lawyer.

Listen to senior citizens in Olympia who struggle with enormous paperwork for the treatment of chronic illnesses. The time and effort for patients and providers alike cause unnecessary delay and confusion.

Listen to the nurse in Tacoma who delicately cares for the fragile and tiny baby born prematurely and addicted to crack cocaine. The extraordinary medical costs to preserve the life of an innocent are passed on to a society that bitterly complains of rising premiums and outrageous medical costs.

Listen to the hardware store owner in Spokane who wants to attract employees by offering health insurance. Unfortunately, as a small employer, he does not have the purchasing power to purchase an affordable plan. Even if he were able to insure his employees, coverage for all would be jeopardized if just one employee suffered from a catastrophic illness.

Listen to the trauma doctor at Harborview Medical Center who can tell the time of day on a Friday afternoon by the growing line of uninsured and homeless patients with basic and preventable health care needs. She will tell you about the 100-percent increase in emergency room visits over the past decade due to violence, drugs, and the absence of affordable primary care.

Listen, Madam President.

Listen not to the special interests, but to the unorganized people of Washington State who must deal with the harsh inadequacies of the present health care system day in and day out. They know how to improve the system—but first, we must listen.

Once we have listened, we can begin to act.

We can start, Madam President, by being honest and forthcoming with the American people about health care reform. Raucous campaignlike bus tours and glitzy Donohuelike electronic townhall meetings must not obscure the realities of comprehensive health care reform.

Let us start by admitting that it will cost money. That is correct; if health care is sold as a right, then people must be prepared to pay for that right.

Let us start by giving the American people some credit—they want less rhetoric and more straight talk. For instance, let us talk about the responsibility of health care. Without being too simplistic, let us remind ourselves that we can help control health care costs by improving our diets, educating ourselves about healthy lifestyles, and dedicating ourselves to behavior that is consistent with good health.

Let us start by confessing that this will be tough. Even minor adjustments to a $900 billion industry that employs millions of Americans will have enormous consequences, most of which are unforeseen. While "Health Care Reform Now" is a compelling slogan, I, and the people of Washington State, would prefer health care reform that will truly be an improvement.

We cannot afford health care reform at any cost, but we can afford, and must pursue, health care reform that is cost effective.

This, of course, is all common sense—and that is precisely my point. We cannot forget the value of common sense during this important debate.

Let us start by putting our partisan differences aside, and commit to ourselves and the American people that we will work together. Let us avoid the disaster that would result if we lumped massive health care reform with the President's economic plan for the sake of political expediency. A reckless attempt to steamroller Congress without serious deliberation would be a violation of the basic principles of representative democracy. Much worse, it would be a severe betrayal of the trust of the American people.

I was impressed with the First Lady when I met with her and other Senators 2 weeks ago to discuss health care reform. She has a clear grasp of the complexity of health care reform and is willing to listen to different opinions. I hope and intend to continue that dialog which can only serve to improve the final product the American people desire.

As we become immersed in debates over global budgets and managed competition, let us not forget that it is our families, friends, and neighbors who will gain or lose from our decisions. We must not lose sight of the fact that health care is intensely personal and private.

The patient must come first, and like any good doctor, we must listen carefully to what the patient has to say.

The debate over health care reform has evolved dramatically over the last 2 years. At first a Canadian-style system, under which the Federal Government finances a State-administered system with global budgets, seemed an attractive option to control costs and provide quality health insurance to all. However, it soon became obvious to most observers that Canada is having a difficult time with health care inflation, and many Canadians still go south to my State of Washington for the health care they desire and need more quickly and of higher quality than the Canadian system can provide.

Many Washingtonians have let me know in no uncertain terms that while the Canadian system may be fine for Canadians, it is unacceptable to have the Federal and State Government decide what health care they can have and when they can have it.

The next serious option was the so-called play-or-pay proposal advocated by the majority leader, Senator MITCHELL. This approach gave employers the apparent option of providing health insurance for their employees or paying an enormous payroll tax into a public fund which would finance health insurance for the uninsured.

Proponents called this a simple way to provide universal health insurance to all without major changes in the health care system. Critics called it pay-or-pay and Medicaid for the middle class because it simply would lead to a costly expansion of publicly financed health insurance, just a steppingstone to the single-payor approach. One study concluded that the proposal would shift nearly 52 million Americans covered under an employer-sponsored plan into a public health program. Again, Washingtonians, both employers and employees, let me know in clear terms what this proposal, despite all of its good intentions, would mean to them—lost jobs.

That proposal, which would increase small business health insurance expenses by an astounding 71 percent, would only lead to a dramatic reduction in payrolls. At a time when Boeing is announcing massive layoffs and the jobless rate is at an alltime high in my State, the last thing our economy needs is a job-killer health insurance plan.

Considering the fact that the leadership has not reintroduced this proposal, I assume it is rightfully shortlived and forgotten.

Next came incremental, market-based reform that was advocated by the Bush administration and the Senate Republican health care task force on which I have served for the last 2 years. While incremental in comparison to a single-payor approach, the proposals would have caused massive changes and improvements in the health care system—including tax credits for the poor to purchase insurance, prohibitions on exclusions based on preexisting conditions, assistance for small businesses, malpractice reform, and expansion of community health centers.

Despite the benefits of this approach and its emphasis on quality affordable health care, it lacked a meaningful method of restraining the spiraling costs of health care. Clearly, more comprehensive change was needed.

Last year, Congressman COOPER, a Democrat from Tennessee, introduced the Managed Competition Act and changed the health care reform debate entirely. The concept of managed competition was developed by Paul Ellwood and Alain Enthoven of the Jackson Hole Group. The purpose is to reform the health care financing system in order to harness the only proven method to hold down costs in the long run: the free market.

In its pure form as advocated by Congressman COOPER, providers and insurers would band together as accountable health plans [AHP's] which would compete against one another based on their ability to provide cost-effective, quality health care.

Individuals and most businesses would purchase coverage of an AHP through a health insurance purchasing cooperative, or HIPC, that negotiates with accountable health plan for cost-effective, quality care coverage. A Federal board would determine a minimum benefits package that all AHP's would have to offer. In order to introduce cost consciousness into the purchasing of health insurance by employers, only the costs for the lowest AHP coverage in the HIPC region would be fully tax deductible for businesses.

The concept of managed competition has been adopted by both the Clinton administration and the Senate Republican health care task force. However, serious differences exist in the proposals being developed by each group. The Senate Republican health care task force is pursuing a pure form of managed competition free from coercive Government controls.

The Clinton administration seems, however, to be pursuing a form of managed competition combined with a single-payor, Canadian-style approach that includes global budgets. I am deeply concerned that the First Lady is considering the abandonment of the fundamental premise of managed competition—the ability of the free market to control costs and the savings which would benefit individuals who need health care.

Indeed, it is antithetical to managed competition for the Government to set an arbitrary limit on spending by providers of health care covered by the AHP's. Price fixing and global budgets would restrain the effectiveness of the market just as handcuffs would hinder prizefighters. Again, we must remember to value common sense.

I am also concerned about the ability of managed competition, whatever the definition, to function in rural areas. Managed competition assumes that multiple providers already exist—but in many rural areas, this is not the case.

In fact, it is cooperation among providers, rather than competition, that often provides the best health care for rural communities. Conversations with rural health providers from Colville to Omak and Forks to Sprague raise some legitimate concerns that must be addressed in the coming weeks. As a member of the rural health caucus, I will make certain that rural health care concerns are met if our Nation is to have lasting and beneficial reform.

In addition, I am concerned that under any health care reform plan, States are free to implement their own form of health care reform. My own State is close to passing comprehensive health care reform and must be given the support of the Federal Government in the form of waivers and exemptions.

As I told Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala when she testified before the Senate Budget Committee several weeks ago, States that seize the initiative and enact meaningful reform that fits their State's unique needs should be rewarded, not punished, by national health care reform.

Employers who are subject to payroll taxes to finance State health care reform should not be burdened by additional taxes to finance national health care reform. Again, let us remember common sense.

Although neither has been completed, there is reason to believe that the Senate Republican task force proposal that the White House plan will have more in common than not. That is a great relief to me and to the American public which wants an end to gridlock and wants meaningful health care reform. I look forward to working with the First Lady and other members of the Senate Republican health care task force as we finalize our respective plans.

Madam President, having laid out some basic concerns I have heard from the people of Washington, I would like to make one final point. The best doctors I have known have an extraordinary ability to listen intently to their patients. We in Congress could use that talent, especially when it comes to health care reform.

Let us listen carefully both to what they are saying, and what they are not saying. Comprehensive health care reform will affect each and every American and may bring the most revolutionary change in American domestic policy since Social Security. Too much is at stake to let politics or special interests dominate this debate.

By listening, we assure that we will not only have health care reform, but the right kind of reform. So let's use our best bedside manner, and listen to the people.

After all, the patient must come first.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF BEA AND DAVID BRODY

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, it is unprecedented for the Senate, in a unanimously passed official resolution, to characterize an individual as the 101st Senator. But that is exactly what the Senate once did upon David Brody's so-called retirement from the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith back in 1989. It was a clear expression of the affection that many of us in the Senate, past and present, had and continue to have for this wonderful man.

I reread that resolution prior to making these remarks. I noted that its drafters must have been particularly knowledgeable about the character of David Brody. Not once is the word retirement mentioned. Anyone that knows David knows that there is nothing retiring about David Brody. True to his character, he is still as full of energy, spirit, and good will as he has been at any time during my observations of his very distinguished career. True to the resolution, we continue to treasure his wise counsel and advice on a wide range of issues.

But these remarks aren't delivered simply to pay tribute to David. I want to honor and speak of a remarkable partnership between two delightful friends that Ann and I have come to know in Washington. On March 11, 1993, Bea and David Brody celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary. Their long partnership continues to be a monument to their love for each other and to improving the lives of those around them. They are both deeply devoted to a wide variety of civic and charitable activities. Bea has been a tremendous helpmate and partner to Dave throughout the course of this very unique marriage.

David and I have at least two things in common. We both severely overmarried. Second, each passing year of marriage seems to get ever better.

Although these words of congratulations come belatedly, they come lovingly. I do hope and pray that Bea and David had a most wonderful 50th anniversary celebration. I wish them many more years to savor in their loving, caring, and remarkable partnership.

TRIBUTE TO BILL CROSS

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, I rise to pay tribute to my friend, Bill Cross. It was with a great deal of sadness that I learned that Bill, who was a constant presence in the Chamber for so many years, had died in a car accident on October 22, a few weeks after the Senate adjourned last year. It had been my intention to take a few moments of the Senate's time early in this session to say a few words about this remarkable man. It is still timely now.

Bill was born right here in Washington in 1932. He served our country with distinction in the Army during the Korean war. After his service, he joined the District's Metropolitan Police Department. After 22 years of outstanding service to the police force, he retired with the rank of detective sergeant. Upon his retirement, he became the Assistant Director of Security for the U.S. House of Representatives Select Committee on Assassinations. When that committee completed its work—he joined the Senate Sergeant at Arms Office. He worked here until his most untimely and tragic death.

Bill was a devoted husband and father. During this difficult time, the thoughts and prayers of this Senate family go winging out to June, his wife of 40 years; his five daughters, Patricia, Judy, Christine, Rhonda, and Nancy; his sons-in-law, Dennis, Martin, Ed, William, and George; his brothers, Robert and Jack; his cousin, Anne; his 11 grandchildren, and all the other people whose lives Bill touched and who do miss him so deeply.

And as a native Washingtonian, Bill's love for the Redskins could never be surpassed. He was always up on the latest news from training camp; the injury report; who was going to start, and all the other inside scoop on his team. Even the spread, if you pardon the expression. No one loved going to the Redskins games, here or away, more than Bill did.

What I enjoyed most about Bill was his wonderful sense of humor. He always had a good story or tale to share, but I never recall his humor ever being at the expense of others, or sharp.

He had a remarkable zest for life. He was taken from us entirely too early. He was very active in police and veterans associations such as the Fraternal Order of Police, the D.C. Association of Retired Policemen, and the American Legion. He was very public spirited and he served as president of the Laurel Acres Civic Association, and President of the Bryans Road Little League Association. He was also an active member of the Lions Club.

He loved this institution and those who worked here. He was a well-rounded, wonderful man. He was devoted to his family. He served his country with distinction. He served with honor as a policeman. He unselfishly gave his time to civic activities to improve his community. And he did all that and more with his tremendously positive outlook on life, combined with his great sense of humor. We shall all very much miss our friend, Bill Cross.

God rest his soul.

MIKE MANSFIELD

Mr. SIMPSON. Madam President, finally, a belated tribute to our friend, Mike Mansfield, whose 90th birthday we celebrated just several days ago. He and my father served here in the U.S. Senate together. He was from the neighboring State of Montana, and my father, of course, was from the State of Wyoming. It was due to my observations of Mike Mansfield in his duties in the U.S. Senate that made me know that this was where a person could go and work hard for their State and their country, and do it with extraordinary grace, with a rich type of human kindness, that was the essence of Mike Mansfield.

He served here and did a superb job as majority leader. The same job so capably being performed now by our friend from Maine, GEORGE MITCHELL. Senator Mansfield did it his way, with his own style, working along with Everett Dirksen who did the minority leader job in his own way, and with his own style. Those were times of great progress in the country. Much was accomplished in a bipartisan fashion, both in domestic and foreign policy.

I, then, watched him serve as our Ambassador to Japan and saw the reverence and respect that the Japanese people rendered to him. It was truly remarkable.

So it was a great pleasure to help honor him on his 90th birthday. To Mike and to Maureen, a truly remarkable woman at his side, this is a tribute to them. Thanks go to them from a grateful Government and an especially grateful Senate. There are those in the Chamber today like Senator BYRD, who remember him so well. He served with Senator Mansfield with great distinction, as did my father.

I commend him and congratulate him on this great milestone. May he have many more to savor.

I thank the Chair.

IRRESPONSIBLE CONGRESS? HERE'S TODAY'S BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, the Federal debt—run up by the U.S. Congress—stood at $4,222,102,651,276.54 as of the close of business on Wednesday, March 24.

Anybody remotely familiar with the U.S. Constitution is bound to know that no President can spend a dime of the taxpayers' money that has not first been authorized and appropriated by the Congress of the United States. Therefore, no Member of Congress, House or Senate, can pass the buck as to the responsibility for this long-term and shameful display of irresponsibility. The dead cat lies on the doorstep of the Congress of the United States.

During the past fiscal year, it cost the American taxpayers $286,022,000,000 merely to pay the interest on reckless Federal spending, approved by Congress—spending of the taxpayers' money over and above what the Federal Government has collected in taxes and other income. This has been what is called deficit spending—but it's really a form of thievery. Averaged out, this astounding interest paid on the Federal debt amounts to $5.5 billion every week, or $785 million every day—just to pay. I reiterate for the purpose of emphasis, the interest on the existing Federal debt.

Looking at it on a per capita basis, every man, woman, and child in America owes $16,437.43—thanks to the big-spenders in Congress for the past half century. The interest payments on this massive debt average out to be $1,127.85 per year for each man, woman, and child in America. Or, looking at it still another way, for each family of four, the tab—to pay the interest alone, mind you—comes to $4,511.40 per year.

Does this prompt you to wonder what America's economic stability would be like today if, for the past five or six decades, there had been a Congress with the courage and the integrity to maintain a balanced Federal budget? The arithmetic speaks for itself.

CUTS IN HEALTH CARE FRAUD INSPECTION SERVICES

Mr. COHEN. Madam President, I rise today to express my deep concern about current and proposed cuts in the Department of Health and Human Service's Office of Inspector General. At a time when health care costs are skyrocketing, pursuing fraudulent activities should be one of our highest priorities.

America's health care costs climbed to $840 billion last year and could top the $1 trillion mark as early as next year. This explosion in health care spending has created a wealth of opportunities for a growing and increasingly sophisticated army of scam artists.

Instead of marshalling our best troops to combat fraud and abuse, the Inspector General's Office has been cut dramatically over the last few years. As fraudulent activities have soared, at a cost of about $80 billion a year, the Inspector General's Office has decreased staff from 460 positions in 1990 to 390 positions in 1993.

A 1991 hiring freeze only exacerbated the current problem. Due to cutbacks, the I.G. is forced to eliminate new investigative activities in 14 States, including my State of Maine, and significantly reduce caseloads in many more States.

A Washington Post article states that the I.G. has been told by administration officials to plan on a fiscal year 1994 budget that is 3 percent lower than 1993 levels. That would mean a further reduction of 40 positions this year.

As ranking member of the Special Committee on Aging, I am currently working with the I.G.'s Office in a number of areas that raise disturbing problems in the health care industry. What we are finding are widespread kickbacks to doctors for referring patients for services and other outrageous moneymaking schemes.

By eliminating positions in the I.G.'s Office, we are calling off the watchdog and inviting the burglar to come right on in. We are telling fraudulent health care providers that they can get away with their current behavior. This is a very dangerous message to send.

In 1991, the minority staff of the Aging Committee worked with the Inspector General's Office on an investigation of durable medical equipment telemarketers who were taking advantage of the weaknesses in the system to bleed millions of dollars from the Medicare Program.

The investigation revealed shocking practices of fly-by-night telemarketing operations that made call after call to unsuspecting seniors to induce them to accept what was described as "free medical equipment"—equipment that was rarely needed, generally of inferior quality, and of little or no therapeutic value.

This investigation led to savings of millions of dollars for the Medicare Program. In a time of fiscal constraint, we should be aggressively pursuing those avenues that lead to savings and decreased costs to overall system. Madam President, the effect of these reductions is to cut off our nose to spite our face.

I am also sending a letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala to cite my deep concerns and to learn more about the status of this proposal. I share the administration's desire to curb spending as much as possible to reduce the deficit.

However, cutting our enforcement effort against health care fraud is penny wise and pound foolish. Every dollar we spend to guard against fraud and abuse can yield significant returns to Medicare and our overall health care system.

FACES OF THE HEALTH CARE CRISIS

Mr. RIEGLE. Madam President, I rise today to put a face on the health care crisis confronting America. Like many of my colleagues, I have heard from constituents from all areas in Michigan about the problems they are encountering with our health care system. One group of people who have found themselves without health insurance are those who, for one reason or another, retire before they are eligible for Medicare benefits.

Willidean Lopshire from Battle Creek, MI, is one person who has found herself in this situation. In 1987, the company she worked for, Interbake Foods, decided to relocate. Willidean was forced into early retirement after 19½ years with the company. She was just 8 years away from being eligible for Medicare benefits.

Willidean, now 62, was left with a small retirement benefit of $309 per month from Interbake Foods, which amounted to just over $3,700 a year. The only health care coverage she has is hospitalization through an AARP policy, for which she pays $27 a month. Her policy only covers $240 a day for hospitalization. It does not cover outpatient charges, physician fees, or prescriptions.

Willidean wanted to take action to improve her personal situation. She decided to take this opportunity to earn her high school diploma and obtain a certificate in word processing, hoping this would enable her to get a better paying job. Unfortunately, this was not the case. The only job she was able to get was a part-time position as a barmaid earning $4.50 an hour.

Just last year, in 1992, Willidean began collecting $459 a month in Social Security retirement benefits which added to her $309 a month in pension from Interbake Foods. This income allowed her to get back on her feet again, but then tragedy struck.

Willidean needed a cataract and lens implant operation. Since this is considered an outpatient service her AARP benefits would not cover the procedure. Willidean had already paid $62 for her initial visit and knew that she was going to have to come up with an additional $2,000 for doctor fees and $4,000 for the hospital fees. Her doctor tried to delay surgery in the hopes that she could find a way to obtain insurance. In January, Willidean went to the Department of Social Services to ask for assistance with this surgery but was denied because her income was too high.

She considered waiting to have the surgery until she reached 65 and became eligible to receive Medicare. Her doctors felt strongly that this wasn't an option for her because her cataracts were in extremely poor condition and if she waited any longer she would face serious complications including possible blindness. On February 17, Willidean went ahead with the surgery knowing that she would owe $6,000. She had no choice, she needed the surgery immediately whether she had the money or not. Fortunately, she was able to set up an agreement with the hospital and her doctor. She pays $85 a month toward her hospital bill and $65 a month toward her doctor bills.

These monthly payments on her limited income make it difficult to meet her daily expenses. She is forced to forego needed preventative care, such as regular checkups, which everyone should be entitled to. She saves every penny in order to pay for her eye drops which cost her $54 a month. When she discovered she needed the surgery, she began saving money for the glasses she would need after the operation which improved her vision. Her medical bills have eaten up these savings and she told my staff that, "If the Lions Club doesn't help with my glasses, I don't know where I'll get the money from."

"I feel cheated," Willidean explains in a letter she wrote to me earlier this year. "I've worked hard all my life. I see young people every day that are healthy and much more able to work than I am and they are getting help from the government. All I want is assistance to help me see again, is that too much to ask?"

Willidean Lopshire, and every family in America, deserves affordable coverage that provides basic health care services. Like Willidean, too many families are finding that health care coverage is out of their financial reach. Health care should not be a luxury available to some and not others. I will continue to do all that I can to bring down the skyrocketing costs of health insurance by supporting comprehensive reform of the current health care system.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

MEASURE HELD AT THE DESK— S. 664

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 664, introduced earlier today by Senators METZENBAUM and THURMOND, be held at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Madam President, earlier today, along with Senator METZENBAUM, I introduced a technical amendment to section 8 of the Clayton Act. This technical amendment is identical to S. 3330 which was passed by the Senate last year. This legislation changes the date by which the Federal Trade Commission, each year, must publish revised jurisdictional threshold numbers for the Clayton Act's prohibition of interlocking directorates. This change is necessary because the Commission must base its threshold numbers on data from the Department of Commerce that is not available until after the date by which the law requires the Commission to act. I urge my colleagues to adopt this technical amendment.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY ACT

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, in June 1991, I was proud to release the unanimous, bipartisan recommendations of the National Commission on Children in a bold report, "Beyond Rhetoric: A New American Agenda for Children and Families."

Our report outlined an aggressive blueprint to change policy and programs on all levels, and to promote the well-being of children and strengthen families. Since then, I have traveled across the country to promulgate the Commission's recommendations, and I have been truly heartened by the public's warm response to our call for action.

As Chairman of the National Commission on Children, I am deeply committed to following through on our report and intend to persist in transforming our bipartisan recommendations into law and reality.

The cornerstone of the Commission's report was its proposal to enhance income security for families with children. Americans understand that children need basic financial support, but our taxpayers want a responsible approach toward Federal assistance which emphasizes parental responsibility and promotes a transition from welfare to work.

The Family Income Security Act is comprehensive legislation to enact the goals of the Children's Commission. The fundamental principle of our income security package is that every child and every family in America deserves support. The time has come to shift our emphasis from punishing some families, of whom some do not approve, to rewarding each family who embraces the values that we hold dear: Hard work, personal responsibility, and family stability.

The legislation includes four major provisions.

The first provision is a $1,000 refundable tax credit for each child, to replace the existing personal exemption which has lost value over time. A refundable tax credit is the same for each child, but its impact will help lower income families much more than the present exemption. These families truly need and deserve such support.

The legislation also calls for expansion and simplification of the earned income tax credit [EITC], an incentive that encourages self-sufficiency by assisting parents who play by the rules and work, but still have problems making ends meet and providing for their children.

Third, the package calls for tougher child support enforcement and a demonstration in several States of a child support insurance program; a government-insured minimum benefit for a parent who has a child support award but does not receive the support payments from the absent parent. Commissioners supported a demonstration of child support insurance with the strong hope that its results would lay the groundwork for a nationwide program.

Finally, the legislation would establish a community work demonstration using waivers to redirect Federal training funds to parents who are willing and able to work but cannot find a job in an economically depressed region.

As a comprehensive package, the Family Income Security Act will help all families with children. Middle-class families would keep more of what they earn. Lower income working families would be lifted out of poverty, the proper reward for work and responsibility. The tax credit would be provided to each child equally. Every child will benefit.

The commissioners visited Charleston, WV, during the course of our deliberations and each of us spent time visiting a family in their own home. These families volunteered to candidly talk with commissioners about their struggles to make ends meet on limited incomes. Sitting down with parents and children in their homes, we heard first hand how families juggle jobs and child care; how they decide which bills to pay and which ones must wait until the next payday; and what kind of personal toll this has on children and the family as a whole.

Based on our visit to West Virginia, hearings with testimony by experts, and indepth research, we developed this comprehensive package which envisions bold systemic reform. But I want to emphasize the point that we also can implement these provisions in incremental steps.

President Clinton has called for expansion of the EITC as part of his economic package, and I hope Congress will do its part to achieve this important goal. The President has also indicated his commitment to strengthen child support enforcement and reform welfare to provide opportunities and training for parents to move from welfare to work. Each initiative is an important step toward enacting the goals of the Children's Commission to strengthen income security for children and families.

I strongly endorse these efforts by President Clinton, and I believe expanding the EITC and strengthening child support enforcement are basic building blocks for a new foundation of income security for American children and families.

While it will take time to fulfill the complete vision of the Children's Commission's bold plan, I am encouraged. There is real potential to move forward on several fronts this year.

As chairman, I am committed to continue my efforts until we have achieved our goal of a strong income security plan for children and families.

Poverty among elderly Americans was substantially reduced in just two decades because our Nation made the economic well-being of seniors a high priority and followed through with the establishment and implementation of policies aimed at ensuring a basic income and protection from extraordinary medical expenses. The reduction in poverty of our seniors has been a historic achievement.

But our children are now the poorest group in our society with one out of every five children in our country growing up in poverty. This is tragic for children, and threatening for our country's future. A major challenge for the coming decade will be to mobilize the necessary political will to come to the aid of poor children and to ensure that all families raising children have the minimum financial resources required and the chance to reach their full potential.

We on the Commission honestly discussed and addressed the costs of our comprehensive income security proposals. But after intensive debate, we concluded that unless our Nation adopts a strategy to prevent poverty and ensure the economic security of all families with children, the long-term human and financial costs of our neglect will be far greater. Failure to support the development of the next generation and of the families that nurture them will compromise our Nation's future in the 21st century.

I offer this legislation to remind my colleagues and the American people of the direction that the National Commission on Children has recommended in the interest of all children and families. Our society has sadly neglected too many children and families, and must reorder its priorities and its values in order to build a future of productive citizens. It is my fervent hope that we will have the courage and the fortitude to shift course, and take steps like these crucial recommendations of the Children's Commission to build a fundamentally better future.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 663

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.

Sec. 2. Findings and purpose.

TITLE I—REFUNDABLE CREDIT FOR CHILDREN

Sec. 101. Refundable credit for children.

TITLE II—EARNED INCOME TAX CREDIT INCREASED FOR LARGER FAMILIES.

Sec. 201. Earned income tax credit increased for larger families.

TITLE III—CHILD SUPPORT INSURANCE DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Sec. 301. Establishment of child support insurance demonstration projects.

TITLE IV—COMMUNITY EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Sec. 405. Regulations.

Sec. 406. Plan of implementation and effect of title.

Sec. 407. Evaluation and report.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) it is in the best interest of all Americans to ensure that children in the United States grow up in families that are financially able to meet the basic material needs of such children;

(2) poverty, hunger, and ill-health jeopardize the national productivity and security of the United States;

(3) the United States is the only advanced industrial democracy that lacks a universal system of income support for families raising children;

(4) children are the poorest Americans and are, therefore, among the most vulnerable citizens;

(5) families raising children have been disproportionately harmed by economic instability over the past decade;

(6) families raising children pay more than their fair share of the Federal tax burden;

(7) parents, regardless if such parents live together, have a responsibility to support their children financially, although many absent parents fail to meet this obligation;

(8) single-parent families are most vulnerable to poverty and financial hardship, especially if the absent parent does not contribute child support;

(9) the majority of poor families have at least one employed adult, and many families are unable to support their children adequately unless such families have more than one earner; and

(10) an adequate income can help foster family stability.

(b) PURPOSE.—To strengthen American families, encourage parental responsibility, meet the basic material needs of all children, and secure the Nation's future, it is the purpose of this Act to provide tax relief for families raising children, initiate demonstration programs to strengthen child support enforcement and guarantee a minimum level of support to all children of absent parents, and initiate demonstration programs to enable communities to create employment opportunities for low-income parents who are willing and able to work but experience difficulty entering the job market without aid.

(b) CONTENTS OF APPLICATION.—An application submitted by the Governor of a State shall—

(1) contain a description of the proposed child support insurance project to be established, implemented, or improved using amounts provided under this section, including the specific activities to be undertaken and the agencies to be involved;

(2) specify whether the project will be carried out throughout the State or in limited areas of the State;

(3) estimate the number of children who will be eligible for insured minimum child support payments under the project, and the amounts to which they will be entitled, on average as individuals and in the aggregate;

(4) describe the child support guidelines and review procedures which are in use in the State and any expected modifications;

(5) contain a commitment by the State to carry out the project during a period of 3 consecutive years beginning with fiscal year 1994;

(6) contain assurances that the State is currently at or above the national median in—

(A) the percentage of cases in which paternity is established when required;

(B) the percentage of cases in which child support orders are obtained; and

(C) the percentage of cases with child support orders in which collections are made;

(8) describe the extent to which multiple agencies, including those responsible for administering the Aid to Families With Dependent Children Program under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act and child support collection, enforcement, and payment under part D of such title, will be involved in the design and operation of the child support insurance project; and

(9) contain such other information as the Secretary may require by regulation.

(c) USE OF FUNDS.—A State shall use amounts provided under a grant awarded under this section to carry out a child support insurance project designed to provide a minimum monthly child support benefit for each eligible child in the State to the extent that such minimum child support is not paid in a month by the noncustodial parent.

(d) REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A child support insurance demonstration project funded under this section shall provide that—

(A) any child (as defined in paragraph (2)) with a living noncustodial parent for whom a child support order has been obtained or any child (as so defined) whose custodial parent meets "good cause" criteria (as determined by the Secretary under section 402(a)(26)(B) of the Social Security Act) for not seeking or enforcing a support order is eligible for the insured child support benefit;

(iii) indexed and adjusted for inflation; and

(iv) in the case of a family of children with multiple noncustodial parents, calculated in the same manner as if all such children were full siblings, but any child support payment from a particular noncustodial parent shall only be applied against the child support insured benefit for the child or children of that particular noncustodial parent;

(C) except in a State described in section 402(a)(28) of the Social Security Act, the monthly amount of Aid to Families With Dependent Children benefit received under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act otherwise determined under such part shall be reduced by the applicable percentage (as determined in paragraph (3)) of the amount received as a child support insurance benefit for such month;

(D) for purposes of determining the need of a child or relative and the level of assistance under title IV of the Social Security Act or for purposes of determining the eligibility of such a child or relative under title XIX of such Act any amount received as a child support insurance benefit shall be disregarded from income of such child or relative;

(E) in the event that the family as a whole becomes ineligible for Aid to Families With Dependent Children under part A of the Social Security Act due wholly or partly to consideration of child support insurance benefits, the continuing eligibility of the caretaker for Aid to Families With Dependent Children under such title shall be calculated without consideration of the child support insured benefit; and

By Mr. MACK:

S. 665. A bill to provide for special immigrant status for certain aliens working as journalists in Hong Kong; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HONG KONG FREEDOM ACT OF 1993

• Mr. MACK. Mr. President, the British Governor of Hong Kong, Chris Patten has been valiantly struggling to solidify democracy in Hong Kong. He has made modest proposals to make Hong Kong's legislature more democratic. The Chinese Government has reacted to Patten's proposals, and its reaction does not bode well for Hong Kong's future under Chinese sovereignty after 1997.

China has threatened, in response to Governor Patten's proposals, to set up a shadow Chinese Government for Hong Kong. I think this is outrageous, and that the United States Congress must respond to the Chinese Government naked threats against Hong Kong democracy.

There is something that we in Congress can do to, in a small but significant way, help Hong Kong remain free despite the bullies in Beijing. Mr. President, on March 9 a distinguished colleague of ours on the House side, Congressman JOHN PORTER of Illinois, introduced a bill to help guarantee freedom of the press in Hong Kong. Today I rise to introduce the same bill in the Senate.

In 1997 the British colony of Hong Kong will become a "Special Administrative Region" of China. Though the transfer of sovereignty is over four years away, the communist government of China is already giving the free people of Hong Kong a taste of things to come.

Today's Hong Kong has one of the freest, most vibrant and sophisticated press corps in the world. This small territory of only 6 million people has 70 daily newspapers, 600 periodicals, 2 private television companies, 1 government radio and television station, and 2 private radio stations. The Hong Kong media have been part of Hong Kong's commercial success and are critical to maintaining its success and basic freedoms in the future.

Recently, the Chinese Government has been monitoring the Hong Kong press and getting the word out in subtle and non-so-subtle ways that it does not appreciate criticism of the dictators in Beijing, or even expressions of support for greater democracy in Hong Kong. Chinese Government officials have proposed legal actions against Hong Kong publications for publishing unfavorable comments about Beijing officials. A 1990 survey by a Hong Kong university of 522 Hong Kong reporters found that 7 out of 10 reporters surveyed believed that press freedom would be curtailed after 1997. Some reporters, understandably, are beginning to exercise self-censorship out of fear for their own and their families' fate after 1997.

The purpose of the bill I am introducing today is to help alleviate the intimidation that the Chinese authorities are now exercising against the Hong Kong press. The bill will extend up to 1,500 visas to Hong Kong reporters and their families. The visas could be used at any time between January 1, 1997 and January 1, 2002. The visas could be issued to any resident of Hong Kong, whether they are a Hong Kong or Chinese national, who have been journalists for at least 3 years and whose vocation is likely to subject them to harassment or worse.

I understand that 1,500 visas could provide a safe haven for 300 to 500 key journalists and their families. Our hope in introducing this bill, however, is that the visas provided for will be a safety net that allows journalists to stay in Hong Kong and write, speak, and broadcast the unvarnished truth about China and Hong Kong. The purpose of this bill is not to encourage Hong Kong journalists to emigrate to the United States. The purpose is to increase the freedom of the press in Hong Kong, which is critical to maintaining the freedom of all Hong Kong people.

Mr. President, the Chinese threats, stonewalling, and posturing in response to Governor Patten's support for democracy in Hong Kong should outrage freedom-loving people everywhere. I hope that this bill will make a concrete contribution to promoting freedom in Hong Kong. I thank you for your attention, encourage our colleagues to co-sponsor this bill to promote press freedom in Hong Kong, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 665

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SPECIAL IMMIGRANT STATUS FOR CERTAIN ALIENS WORKING AS JOURNALISTS IN HONG KONG.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (c), an alien described in subsection (b) shall be treated as a special immigrant described in section 101(a)(27) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(b) ALIENS COVERED.—An alien is described in this subsection if the alien is—

(1) a journalist residing in Hong Kong—

(A) who is a national of Hong Kong or China;

(B) whose principal employment or source of income has been the news media (including print, radio, and television) in Hong Kong for at least 3 years prior to an application for special immigrant status under this section; and

(C) whose welfare or safety is likely to be subject to threats or harassment due directly to the journalist's work in the news media in Hong Kong; or

(2) the spouse or child (as defined in subsection (e)) of an alien described in paragraph (1), if accompanying or following to join the alien in coming to the United States.

(c) PERIOD OF VALIDITY.—

(1) The period of validity of a special immigrant visa issued under this section shall be on and after January 1, 1997, and before January 1, 2002.

(2) Before the date an alien seeks to be admitted to the United States as a special immigrant under this section, the alien shall notify the appropriate consular officer of the alien's intention to seek such admission and provide such officer with such information as the officer determines to be necessary to verify that the alien remains eligible for admission to the United States as an immigrant.

(d) NUMERICAL LIMITATIONS.—Not more than 1,500 visas shall be made available to aliens as special immigrants under this section. Aliens admitted under this section shall not be counted against any numerical limitation established under section 201 or 202 of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(e) TREATMENT OF CHILDREN.—In this section, the term "child" has the meaning given such term in section 101(b)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act and also includes (for purposes of this section and the Immigration and Nationality Act as it applies to this section) an alien who was the child (as so defined) of the alien as of the date of the issuance of an immigrant visa to the alien described in subsection (b)(1).•

By Mr. DANFORTH (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 666. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to permanently extend and modify the credit for increasing research activities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 1993

• Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, America's leadership in science and technology is critical to the future of the economy.

To the extent that researchers in American laboratories are able to pioneer the new technologies, processes, and products that will drive global markets, we will be able to offer skilled and highly paid jobs to the next generation of our people.

Many of America's core industries are built, literally, on the foundation of research and development. The electronics industry in all its aspects, the aerospace industry, chemicals, scientific and technical instruments, health technology, the burgeoning field of telecommunications—each of these key economic sectors owes its existence to the work of scientists, engineers, and technicians in the private and public sectors.

To the extent that we rob research and development of the resources needed to meet the challenges of the international marketplace, we will drain vitality from the most imaginative and dynamic sectors of the economy.

American success in the contest for leadership in science and technology, is by no means assured. As a percentage of sales, U.S. firms spend only about one-third as much as their German counterparts on research and development, and only about two-thirds as much as Japanese firms.

This disparity in R&D is even more worrisome when one considers that foreign competitors enjoy access to lower cost capital than U.S. firms, and that other governments have made growth in high technology industries a national priority.

A permanent tax credit for research and development, designed to meet the rapidly changing circumstances of global competition, must be a cornerstone of any long-term program for the health and competitiveness of the economy. I am delighted to join with Senator BAUCUS and others to introduce legislation to make the R&D credit permanent and improve the credit in several respects. Representatives PICKLE and ARCHER are introducing companion legislation in the House.

As sponsors of this legislation, we recognize clearly the importance of high technology industries to national defense; the potential for creating high quality new jobs for our people; and the key role of R&D in creating economic growth. Advances in research and development account for about one-third of the gains in manufacturing productivity registered in the post World War II period. Continued gains in productivity are indispensable to the success of technology-based industries and to the strength of the economy. Therefore, our goal is encourage American research and development with a permanent, well-designed and responsive tax credit for new R&D.

I welcome the President's strong support for a permanent R&D credit. I believe that our proposal is fully consistent with the administration's goals, and I look forward to working with Secretary Bentsen and others in the course of the legislative process.

To summarize, these are the principal provisions of the legislation:

The R&D credit, which was among the provisions that expired last June 30, will be made permanent.

Taxpayers will be permitted to update their base period so that future use of the credit will not be limited or denied due to unusual economic or business circumstances in the 1980's. Ten years from today, and beyond, it will make even less sense to use the arbitrary current base period of 1984-88 for calculating the credit. A provision for updating the base period is one of the most important changes we can make in the credit. In addition, updating the base period will occur when taxpayers continue to increase R&D spending, but no longer benefit from the credit for other business reasons.

Many taxpayers are denied use of the R&D credit because they pay the alternative minimum tax, sometimes because of poor earnings and/or major capital investments. The R&D conducted by these taxpayers is at least as valuable as that of taxpayers who pay regular tax. Moreover, many of them are in greater need of incentives to foster new investments in R&D. Under our bill, such taxpayers will be able to offset a portion of their AMT liability with the R&D credit.

For certain small businesses, the bill provides a flat-rate credit for research and development. This will simplify calculation of the credit for small businesses and encourage them to take the risk of investing in new technology.

The U.S. Government will be shifting funds from defense-related technologies to research with potential commercial applications. Accordingly, companies with a strong history of defense-related R&D, including aerospace firms, will be transferring resources to commercial R&D. To enable them to make use of the R&D credit, our legislation permits such taxpayers to calculate the credit without reference to their previous defense-related expenditures.

Finally, this legislation encourages companies to work together collaboratively on R&D programs, pooling resources, talent, know-how, and experience.

I appreciate the work of Senator BAUCUS, Representatives PICKLE and ARCHER, their staffs, and many others in fashioning what I believe is a forward-looking and effective program to help maintain American preeminence in the development of new knowledge and new products.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Research and Development Enhancement Act of 1993 appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Research and Development Enhancement Act of 1993".

(b) AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

SEC. 2. PERMANENT EXTENSION AND MODIFICATION OF RESEARCH CREDIT.

(a) PERMANENT EXTENSION.—

"(i) this section and section 39 shall be applied separately with respect to such credit, and

"(ii) for purposes of applying paragraph (1) to such credit—

"(I) 50 percent of the tentative minimum tax shall be substituted for the tentative minimum tax under subparagraph (A) thereof, and

"(II) the net income tax and net regular tax liability shall be reduced by the credit under subsection (a) (other than the research credit), determined after the application of paragraph (1).

"(B) RESEARCH CREDIT.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'research credit' means the portion of the credit under subsection (a) which is attributable to the research credit determined under section 41(a).

"(C) LIMITATION.—In no event shall this paragraph permit the allowance of a credit which would result in a net chapter 1 tax less than an amount equal to 10 percent of the amount determined under section 55(b)(1)(A) without regard to the alternative tax net operating loss deduction. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'net chapter 1 tax' means the sum of the regular tax liability for the taxable year and the tax imposed by section 55 for the taxable year, reduced by the sum of the credits allowable under this part for the taxable year (other than under section 34)."

"(i) TAXPAYERS TO WHICH SUBPARAGRAPH APPLIES.—The fixed-base percentage shall be determined under this subparagraph if either—

"(I) the first taxable year in which the taxpayer had both gross receipts and qualified research expenses occurred in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1983, or

"(II) there are 3 consecutive taxable years beginning after December 31, 1992, during which the taxpayer's qualified research expenses for each such year do not exceed the taxpayer's base amount for such year, but do exceed the average amount of such expenses during the 3-taxable year period immediately preceding such year.

"(ii) FIXED-BASE PERCENTAGE.—In a case to which this subparagraph applies, the fixed-base percentage is—

"(I) 3 percent for each of the taxpayer's 1st 5 taxable years for which the taxpayer has qualified research expenses in the phase-in period,

"(II) in the case of the taxpayer's 6th such taxable year in the phase-in period, $\frac{1}{2}$ of the percentage which the aggregate qualified research expenses of the taxpayer for the 4th and 5th such taxable years is of the aggregate gross receipts of the taxpayer for such years,

"(III) in the case of the taxpayer's 7th such taxable year in the phase-in period, $\frac{1}{2}$ of the percentage which the aggregate qualified research expenses of the taxpayer for the 5th and 6th such taxable years is of the aggregate gross receipts of the taxpayer for such years,

"(IV) in the case of the taxpayer's 8th such taxable year in the phase-in period, $\frac{1}{2}$ of the percentage which the aggregate qualified research expenses of the taxpayer for the 5th, 6th, and 7th such taxable years is of the aggregate gross receipts of the taxpayer for such years,

"(V) in the case of the taxpayer's 9th such taxable year in the phase-in period, $\frac{1}{2}$ of the percentage which the aggregate qualified research expenses of the taxpayer for the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th such taxable years is of the aggregate gross receipts of the taxpayer for such years,

"(VI) in the case of the taxpayer's 10th such taxable year in the phase-in period, $\frac{1}{2}$ of the percentage which the aggregate qualified research expenses of the taxpayer for the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th such taxable years is of the aggregate gross receipts of the taxpayer for such years, and

"(VII) for such taxable years thereafter, the percentage which the aggregate qualified research expenses for 4 consecutive taxable years selected by the taxpayer from the 5th through 10th such taxable years is of the aggregate gross receipts of the taxpayer for such years.

"(iii) PHASE-IN PERIOD.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'phase-in period' means the period of taxable years beginning with—

"(I) in the case of a taxpayer described in clause (i)(I), the taxable year described in such clause, and

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The heading for subparagraph (B) of section 41(c) is amended by inserting "AND FRESH-START" after "START-UP".

(d) FLAT CREDIT FOR SMALL BUSINESSES.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 41(a) is amended to read as follows:

(e) SPECIAL RULES FOR DEFENSE AND AEROSPACE INDUSTRIES.—Section 41(f) (relating to special rules), as amended by subsection (d)(2), is amended by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) as paragraphs (5), (6), and (7), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:
 "(4) DEFENSE AND AEROSPACE INDUSTRIES.—(A) IN GENERAL.—At the election of the taxpayer, this section may be applied separately with respect to the taxpayer's qualified research expenses and gross receipts attributable to the defense-related activities of such taxpayer. If the taxpayer makes the election under this subparagraph, the base amount for—
 "(i) the taxpayer's defense-related activities shall be determined as if the taxpayer's other activities had been disposed of by the taxpayer, and
 "(ii) the taxpayer's other activities shall be determined as if the taxpayer's defense-related activities had been disposed of by the taxpayer."

(B) DEFENSE-RELATED ACTIVITIES.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'defense-related activities' means any activity in connection with the development and production pursuant to a contract (or sub-contract thereof) of—

 ● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, it is with pleasure that I join with my colleague from Missouri, Senator DAN-FORTH, to introduce a bill critical to the future of American industry. The Research and Development Enhancement Act of 1993 will bolster the competitiveness of American business in the global marketplace. In addition, this bill will encourage firms to undertake the research necessary to develop the technological innovations required to increase the supply of good jobs in this country.

The United States has been a leader in the development of new technology in the past and it still maintains an edge in several areas likely to be important to the economy of the future. At the same time, however, there are areas of commercially relevant technology development in which the United States is now at something of a competitive disadvantage.

Supporting industry in its efforts to pursue success in the development of precompetitive generic technologies, and helping the Nation attain key public goals that depend on technological change, should be the focal points of Federal technology policy in the near future. However, it is still true that private R&D efforts have to be the engine leading economic progress.

For a number of years, the Federal Government has encouraged private sector investment in R&D through the granting of an incremental tax credit. This credit is premised on increases in R&D spending over a base amount, and is designed to provide an incentive, at the margin, for firms to increase their R&D investments.

For the past several years, essentially because of budget pressures, the Congress acted to renew the temporary legislation providing this credit on an annual basis. Corporate planners have not been able to count on it as a certainty in financing the multiyear projects that generally have the most payoff. We share the President's commitment to the enactment of a permanent research and development tax credit.

In anticipation of a permanent R&D credit, we received the input of a variety of business leaders and industry representatives concerning ways to facilitate additional investment in research and development. Included in this process were discussions with representatives of small and large businesses, new companies, and mature industries. As a result, we believe this bill will contribute to the fulfillment of President Clinton's objectives of fostering U.S. leadership in new technology, promoting the emergence of new businesses, aiding the conversion of the defense industry, and promoting an environment where U.S. companies can successfully compete with their foreign counterparts.

The legislation we introduce today, and the companion legislation Representatives PICKLE and ARCHER are introducing in the House, will make the R&D credit permanent for amounts paid or incurred after June 30, 1992.

As summarized in detail by Senator DANFORTH in his statement, the other features of the legislation are as follows:

Permit taxpayers to update their base period so that future use of the credit will not be denied to taxpayers who had uncharacteristic economic results in the 1980's;

Allow periodic updates of base periods where taxpayers continue to increase their R&D spending but get no benefit from the credit;

Allow alternative minimum tax [AMT] taxpayers to offset a portion of their AMT liability with the credit;

Provide a flat rate credit for small businesses;

Allow defense firms to calculate their R&D credit for commercial expenditures without reference to their previous defense-related R&D expenditures; and Provide new incentives designed to encourage companies to work together in collaborative research efforts.

I thank Senator DANFORTH, Representative PICKLE, Representative ARCHER, and their staffs for the effort put forth in formulating this bill, and for continued support for the growth of research and development in this country.

I look forward to working with other Members of Congress and the administration on the implementation of this bill which will contribute to economic growth and prosperity into the 21st century and beyond.●

By Mr. RIEGLE:

S.J. Res. 72. A joint resolution to designate the last week of September 1993, and the last week of September of 1994, as "National Senior Softball Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL SENIOR SOFTBALL WEEK

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, last year I introduced a joint resolution to designate a week in September as National Senior Softball Week. I am reintroducing this joint resolution today. Each September, senior citizen athletes from around the country participate in the Seniors Softball World Series. Last year this fall classic was held in Wayne County, MI. Houston, TX, will be the host for this year's world series.

The idea for the Seniors Softball World Series began in 1985 with Mr. Ken Maas and Ms. Jacqui Jolly. They established the National Association of Senior Citizen Softball [NASCS], and I am proud to say that they founded it in Michigan. The NASCS is the only national organization promoting senior softball; teams from around the United States and Canada know the work of the NASCS. The first NASCS tournament, held in Clinton Township, MI, attracted 12 teams. The following year 21 teams participated and the year after that, 30 teams.

The success of the NASCS tournament caught on and in 1988, Mr. Maas, working with the Sporting Goods Manufacturers Association, established Seniors Softball World Series, Inc. The first Seniors Softball World Series was held in Greensboro, NC, in 1989 with 68 teams. Since then, the world series has been played in Scottsdale, AZ, and Palm Beach County, FL. The event continues to grow—in 1992, over 100 teams participated in the Seniors Softball World Series.

Mr. President, the growth and success of the NASCS and the Seniors Softball World Series provides further evidence of the energy and joy that seniors bring to this country. Every day we hear about or see examples of seniors throwing out the myth that getting older means you have to give up staying active. Seniors softball also promotes an atmosphere of friendly competition and physical fitness among older Americans. The NASCS also promotes international harmony; twice, teams from the NASCS have made trips to the United Kingdom to share with them this uniquely American game. I urge my colleagues to acknowledge the spirit of our seniors by joining me in supporting this resolution.●

By Mr. RIEGLE (for himself, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. COHEN, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. COCHRAN):

S.J. Res. 73. A joint resolution to designate July 5, 1993, through July 12, 1993, as "National Awareness Week for Life-Saving Techniques"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL AWARENESS WEEK FOR LIFE-SAVING TECHNIQUES

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce with Senator CHAFEE and others a Senate joint resolution to designate July 5 through July 12, 1993, as "National Awareness Week for Life-Saving Techniques." This resolution is designed to inform and to encourage Americans to take advantage of the educational opportunities provided to them to learn basic life-saving techniques. I want to tell my distinguished colleagues about a story that illustrates the importance of life-saving techniques.

On July 3, 1990, Joe McGuire from Dearborn, MI, was celebrating his fourth birthday while vacationing in Grayling, MI, with his family. Playing alongside the beach at Kneff Lake, Joe wandered into the water. At the same time, Buddy Latesky, a 16-year-old young man from Grayling, MI, was swimming with friends nearby. Buddy and his friends noticed something white floating in the water and Buddy went to investigate. When he came upon what he thought had merely been a white discarded t-shirt, he found 4-year-old Joe McGuire floating face down in the water. Buddy reacted immediately. Pulling Joe out of the water, Buddy performed mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, which he had learned in a health class at Swartz Creek Middle School. After a few tense moments, Joe coughed up the water in his lungs and began breathing on his own. Shortly, he was able to rejoin his parents, who took him to an area hospital where he was treated and then released.

Not only did young Buddy Latesky show courage and heroism in this situation, but he also demonstrated the importance of the basic life-saving skills that all Americans have the opportunity to learn. Had it not been for the training Buddy Latesky received in his middle school health class, Joe McGuire probably would not be celebrating his seventh birthday this summer. Buddy is a hero and sets an example for us all.

In 1991, according to the National Safety Council, about 800,000 Americans died from accidents or heart attacks. Accidents alone took over 88,000 U.S. lives in 1991, ranking as the No. 1 killer of young Americans between 1 to 37. For children under the age of 5, drowning and choking are the leading cause of accidental death. These statistics are alarming. What is even more disturbing is that many of these lives may have been saved if someone had known basic rescue breathing, cardiopulmonary resuscitation [CPR], and other life-saving skills.

Buddy Latesky shows us not only the importance of these life-saving techniques, but also, that even as a 16-year-old young man, he was able to be trained to perform these techniques. In 1991 alone, the Red Cross and the American Heart Association certified over 9 million people in the thousands of life-saving classes offered nationwide. Although this is a significant number, millions more need to learn these basic life-saving skills.

Every summer, accidental deaths increase by approximately 1,000 compared to the rest of the year. Therefore, I feel that the week after Fourth of July is the appropriate time for "National Awareness Week for Life-Saving Techniques."

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important resolution. I also want to commend organizations such as the Red Cross, and their chapters across the country and especially Michigan, for the work they do in promoting life-saving techniques. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 73

Whereas the National Safety Council reported that over 800,000 Americans died in 1991 as a result of accidents and diseases of the heart;

Whereas accidents are the leading cause of death for children and youth ages 1 to 24 years;

Whereas drowning and choking are a leading cause of accidental death in children under the age of 5 years;

Whereas rescue breathing and cardiopulmonary resuscitation, commonly referred to as CPR, are life-saving techniques that significantly reduce the incidence of sudden death due to accidents and diseases of the heart;

Whereas it is critical that more Americans learn such basic life-saving techniques in order to reduce the number of deaths related to accidents and diseases of the heart;

Whereas the opportunity to learn basic life-saving techniques is available to all Americans through the American Red Cross, the American Heart Association, the YMCA, and other national organizations; and

Whereas the death rate due to accidents and diseases of the heart would be greatly reduced if more Americans received training in basic life-saving techniques: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That July 5, 1993, through July 12, 1993, is designated as "National Awareness Week for Life-Saving Techniques". The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate ceremonies and activities designed to encourage training in life-saving techniques for Americans. •

• Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator RIEGLE in introducing a resolution to designate the week of July 5 through July 12, 1993, as "National Awareness Week for Life-Saving Techniques."

According to the National Safety Council, almost 850,000 Americans die annually from accidents and heart disease. Many of these deaths could have been prevented if life-saving techniques, such as the Heimlich maneuver and cardiopulmonary resuscitation [CPR], were administered to victims in a timely manner.

It does not take long to learn CPR and other life-saving techniques. The Senate Health Promotion Office offers a CPR course that requires only a 6-hour time commitment. The YMCA, the Red Cross, and the American Heart Association also regularly hold classes. The resolution we are introducing today will help to improve awareness about opportunities to learn CPR and other life-saving techniques.

Mr. President, I am hopeful our colleagues will join us in cosponsoring this important resolution. •

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself,
Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. SIMON, and Mr. SPECTER):

S.J. Res. 74. A joint resolution expressing the sense of the Senate regarding the Government of Malawi's arrest of opponents and suppression of freedoms, and conditioning assistance for Malawi; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MALAWI JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today, I join my colleagues Senator KASSEBAUM, Senator SIMON, and Senator SPECTER in introducing a joint resolution to promote democratic change in Malawi.

In the past year in Malawi, the people's discontent with dictatorship has gained voice through peaceful strikes and peaceful demonstrations. Clerics have denounced the regime from their pulpits. But sadly, the Nation has also endured some of its harshest repression. Hundreds of people have been arrested in recent months in a new government crack-down on opposition.

Under international pressure, the Government of Malawi, headed by a dictator who has declared himself "President for life", has agreed to permit a referendum in June on whether to proceed to multiparty government. However, the Government has undermined this effort at every turn by denying freedom of speech, assembly, and press for the opposition parties. Those who actively campaign for democratic change frequently are arrested, then released under international pressure, only to be rearrested once international pressure subsides.

In response to these harsh measures, the United States and other governments suspended aid to Malawi in May 1992, and the suspension has continued through the present.

Among those treated most harshly is Malawi's leading opposition figure, Mr. Chakufwa Chihana. Mr. Chihana's leadership has been outstanding in the face of tyranny and oppression and he has been a source of hope to millions in his own country. But his courage has exacted a heavy price. He has spent most of his adult life either in exile or in prison in Malawi.

Recently, he renewed the democracy movement in Malawi, only to be rearrested last April for promoting peaceful change in the Government. He has been sentenced to a term of 2½ years of hard labor for actions which in free countries would be considered acts of patriotism.

Our resolution today will assist in the process of reform that is necessary and inevitable in Malawi. It calls for the release of all political prisoners and urges the Government to respect basic and universal freedoms. It further calls upon the Government to establish a truly independent judiciary and other reforms consistent with a free society. The resolution conditions the resumption of aid to the Government of Malawi on the accomplishment of these basic reforms.

Chakufwa Chihana symbolizes a future Malawi, with a Government truly representative of the people. They may lock away Chihana, but they will never lock up the hopes and aspirations of the people of Malawi for freedom and a better tomorrow.

We in Congress have an opportunity through this resolution to support peaceful democratic change in Malawi, and I urge the Senate to support it.

Such percentage may in no case exceed 5 percentage points.

(3) HPPC OVERHEAD AMOUNT.—The HPPC overhead amount for enrollment, whether on an individual or family basis, in an AHP for a HPPC area for a month is equal to the applicable HPPC overhead percentage (computed under paragraph (2)) multiplied by the standard premium amount for individual coverage under the AHP for the month.

(b) TREATMENT OF ADDITIONAL BENEFITS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), subsection (a) shall not be construed as preventing an AHP from offering benefits in addition to the uniform set of effective benefits or for reducing the cost-sharing below the uniform cost-sharing, if such additional benefits or reductions in cost-sharing are offered, and priced, separately from the benefits described in subsection (a).

(2) NO DUPLICATIVE BENEFITS.—An AHP may not offer under paragraph (1) any additional benefits that have the effect of duplicating the benefits required under subsection (a).

SEC. 113. COLLECTION AND PROVISION OF STANDARDIZED INFORMATION.

(a) PROVISION OF INFORMATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each AHP must provide the Board (at a time, not less frequently than annually, and in an electronic, standardized form and manner specified by the Board) such information as the Board determines to be necessary, consistent with this subsection and section 137, to evaluate the performance of the AHP in providing the uniform set of effective benefits to enrollees.

(b) CONDITIONING CERTAIN PROVIDER PAYMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to assure the collection of all information required from the direct providers of services for which benefits are available through an AHP, each AHP may not provide payment for services (other than emergency services) furnished by a provider to meet the uniform set of effective benefits unless the provider has given the AHP (or has given directly to the National Board) standard information (specified by the Board) respecting the services.

(2) FORWARDING INFORMATION.—If information under paragraph (1) is given to the AHP, the AHP is responsible for forwarding the information to the Board.

SEC. 114. PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION BASED ON HEALTH STATUS FOR CERTAIN CONDITIONS; LIMITATION ON PRE-EXISTING CONDITION EXCLUSIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided under subsection (b), an AHP may not deny, limit, or condition the coverage under (or benefits of) the plan based on the health status, claims experience, receipt of health care, medical history, or lack of evidence of insurability, of an individual.

(b) TREATMENT OF PREEXISTING CONDITION EXCLUSIONS FOR SERVICES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, an AHP may exclude coverage with respect to services related to treatment of a preexisting condition, but the period of such exclusion may not exceed 6 months beginning on the date of coverage under the plan. The exclusion of coverage shall not apply to services furnished to newborns and to pregnant women.

(2) CREDITING OF PREVIOUS COVERAGE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An AHP shall provide that if an enrollee is in a period of continuous coverage (as defined in subparagraph (B)(i)) as of the date of initial coverage under such plan, any period of exclusion of cov-

(1) PERIOD OF CONTINUOUS COVERAGE.—The term "period of continuous coverage" means the period beginning on the date an individual is enrolled under an AHP (or, before July 1, 1994, under any health plan that provides benefits with respect to such services) and ends on the date the individual is not so enrolled for a continuous period of more than 3 months.

(2) PREEXISTING CONDITION.—The term "preexisting condition" means, with respect to coverage under an AHP, a condition which has been diagnosed or treated during the 3-month period ending on the day before the first date of such coverage (without regard to any waiting period).

(3) LIMITATION.—This subsection shall not apply to treatment which is not within the uniform set of effective benefits.

SEC. 115. USE OF STANDARD PREMIUMS.

(A) STANDARD PREMIUMS FOR OPEN AHPs.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (b), each open AHP shall establish a standard premium for the uniform set of effective benefits within each HPPC area in which the plan is offered. The amount of premium applicable for all individuals within a premium class (established under paragraph (2)) is the standard premium amount multiplied by the premium class factor specified by the Board for that class under paragraph (2)(B). Within a HPPC area for individuals within a premium class, the standard premium for all individuals in the class shall be the same.

(2) PREMIUM CLASSES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall establish premium classes—

(i) based on types of enrollment (described in section 2(c)(6)); and

(ii) within each type of enrollment, based on age of principal enrollee.

In carrying out clause (ii), the Board shall establish reasonable age bands within which premium amounts will not vary for a type of enrollment.

(B) PREMIUM CLASS FACTORS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For each premium class established under subparagraph (A), the Board shall establish a premium class factor that reflects, subject to clause (ii), the relative actuarial value of benefits for that class compared to the actuarial value of benefits for an average class.

(2) LIMIT ON VARIATION IN PREMIUM CLASS FACTORS.—The highest premium class factor may not exceed twice the lowest premium class factor and the weighted average of the premium class factors shall be 1.

(3) METHODOLOGY.—Standard premiums are subject to adjustment in accordance with section 102(d)(1).

(b) LIMITATION ON PREMIUM INCREASES.—

(1) BOARD ACTION.—The Board shall establish annual limits on the permissible percentage rate of increase for premiums with respect to AHP's providing the uniform set of effective benefits.

(2) INCREASES.—Annual increases in premiums for an AHP may not exceed the percentage limit established by the Board under paragraph (1).

SEC. 116. FINANCIAL SOLVENCY REQUIREMENTS.

(A) SOLVENCY PROTECTION.—

(1) FOR INSURED PLANS.—In the case of an AHP that is an insured plan (as defined by the Board) and is issued in a State, in order for the plan to be registered under this subtitle the Board must find that the State has established satisfactory protection of enrollees with respect to potential insolvency.

(2) FOR OTHER PLANS.—In the case of an AHP that is not an insured plan, the Board may require the plan to provide for such bond or provide other satisfactory assurances that enrollees under the plan are protected with respect to potential insolvency of the plan.

(b) PROTECTION AGAINST PROVIDER CLAIMS.—In the case of a failure of an AHP to make payments with respect to the uniform set of basic benefits, under standards established by the Board, an individual who is enrolled under the plan is not liable to any health care provider or practitioner with respect to the provision of health services within such uniform set for payments in excess of the amount for which the enrollee would have been liable if the plan were to have made payments in a timely manner.

SEC. 117. GRIEVANCE MECHANISMS; ENROLLEE PROTECTIONS; WRITTEN POLICIES AND PROCEDURES RESPECTING ADVANCE DIRECTIVES; AGENT COMMISSIONS.

(a) EFFECTIVE GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES.—Each AHP shall provide for effective procedures for hearing and resolving grievances between the plan and individuals enrolled under the plan, which procedures meet standards specified by the Board.

(b) RESTRICTION ON CERTAIN PHYSICIAN INCENTIVE PLANS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A health plan may not be registered as an AHP if it operates a physician incentive plan (as defined in paragraph (2)) unless the requirements specified in clauses (i) through (iii) of section 1876(i)(8)(A) of the Social Security Act are met (in the same manner as they apply to eligible organizations under section 1876 of such Act).

(2) PHYSICIAN INCENTIVE PLAN DEFINED.—In this subsection, the term "physician incentive plan" means any compensation or other financial arrangement between the AHP and a physician or physician group that may directly or indirectly have the effect of reducing or limiting services provided with respect to individuals enrolled under the plan.

(c) WRITTEN POLICIES AND PROCEDURES RESPECTING ADVANCE DIRECTIVES.—A health plan may not be registered as an AHP unless the plan meets the requirements of section 1866(f) of the Social Security Act (relating to maintaining written policies and procedures respecting advance directives), insofar as such requirements would apply to the plan if the plan were an eligible organization.

(d) PAYMENT OF AGENT COMMISSIONS.—An AHP—

(1) may pay a commission or other remuneration to an agent or broker in marketing the plan to individuals or groups; but

(2) may not vary such remuneration based, directly or indirectly, on the anticipated or actual claims experience associated with the group or individuals to which the plan was sold.

SEC. 118. ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS OF OPEN AHPs.

(a) REQUIREMENT OF AGREEMENT WITH HPPC.—In the case of a health plan which is an open plan (as defined in section 2(b)(4)(B)), in order to be registered as an AHP the plan must have in effect an agreement (described in section 102) with each HPPC for each HPPC area in which it is offered.

(b) REQUIREMENT OF OPEN ENROLLMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a health plan which is an open health plan, in order to be registered as an AHP the plan must, subject to paragraph (3), not reject the en-

(B) fraud or misrepresentation; or

(C) termination of the plan at the end of a year (after notice and in accordance with standards established by the Board).

(3) TREATMENT OF NETWORK PLANS.—

(A) GEOGRAPHIC LIMITATIONS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—An AHP which is a network plan (as defined in subparagraph (D)) may deny coverage under the plan to an eligible individual who is located outside a service area of the plan, but only if such denial is applied uniformly, without regard to health status or insurability of individuals.

(ii) SERVICE AREAS.—The Board shall establish standards for the designation by network plans of service areas in order to prevent discrimination based on health status of individuals or their need for health services.

(B) SIZE LIMITS.—Subject to subparagraph (C), an AHP which is a network plan may apply to the Board to cease enrolling eligible individuals under the AHP (or in a service area of the plan) if—

(i) it ceases to enroll any new eligible individuals; and

(ii) it can demonstrate that its financial or administrative capacity to serve previously covered groups or individuals (and additional individuals who will be expected to enroll because of affiliation with such previously covered groups or individuals) will be impaired if it is required to enroll other eligible individuals.

(C) FIRST-COME-FIRST-SERVED.—A network plan is only eligible to exercise the limitations provided for in subparagraphs (A) and (B) if it provides for enrollment of eligible individuals on a first-come-first-served basis.

(D) NETWORK PLAN.—In this paragraph, the term "network plan" means an eligible organization (as defined in section 1876(b) of the Social Security Act) and includes a similar organization, specified in regulations of the Board, as requiring a limitation on enrollment of employer groups or individuals due to the manner in which the organization provides health care services.

(c) REQUIREMENT OF PARTICIPATION IN MEDICARE RISK-BASED CONTRACTING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a health plan which is an open health plan and which is an eligible organization (as defined in section 1876(b) of the Social Security Act), in order to be registered as an AHP the plan must enter into a risk-sharing contract under section 1876 of the Social Security Act for the offering of benefits to Medicare beneficiaries in accordance with such section.

(2) EXPANSION OF MEDICARE SELECT PROGRAM.—Subsection (c) of section 4358 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 (104 Stat. 1388-137) is amended by striking "only apply in 15 States" and all that follows through the end and inserting "on and after January 1, 1992."

(d) PARTICIPATION IN FEHBP.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a health plan which is an open health plan, in order to be registered as an AHP the plan must have entered into an agreement with the Office of Personnel Management to offer a health plan to Federal employees and annuitants, and family members, under the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program under chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code, under the same terms and conditions offered by the AHP for enrollment of individuals and small employers through HPPCs.

(2) CHANGE IN CONTRIBUTION AND OTHER FEHB RULES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, effective January 1, 1994—

(A) enrollment shall not be permitted under a health benefits plan under chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code, unless the plan is an AHP, and

(B) the amount of the Federal Government contribution under such chapter—

(i) for any premium class shall be the same for all AHPs in a HPPC area,

(ii) for any premium class shall not exceed the base individual premium (as defined in section 229(c)(3)), and

(iii) in the aggregate for any fiscal year shall be equal to the aggregate amount of Government contributions that would have been made but for this section.

SEC. 119. ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENT OF CERTAIN AHPs.

(a) MEDICARE ADJUSTMENT PAYMENT REQUIRED.—Each AHP which does not meet the requirement of section 148(c) shall provide for payment to the Board of such amounts as may be required as to put the plan in the same financial position as the AHP would be in if it met such requirement.

(b) REDISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS TO PLANS.—The Board shall provide for the distribution among AHPs meeting the requirement of section 148(c) of amounts paid under subsection (a) in such manner as reflects the relative financial impact of such requirement among such plans.

COHEN (AND DECONCINI) AMENDMENT NO. 277

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. COHEN (for himself and Mr. DECONCINI), submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H.R. 1335), supra, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

SEC. . (a) The Senate finds that—

- (1) the Federal Government owns over 400,000 buildings that cost the taxpayers hundreds of billions of dollars;
- (2) the Federal Government is the largest single tenant and builder of office space in the United States;
- (3) the Federal Government currently has $11,400,000,000 of construction in the works which, when completed, will add approximately 23,000,000 square feet of office space;
- (4) the Federal Government is constructing, or entering into long-term leases for buildings constructed expressly for the Federal Government, in areas with building vacancy rates as high as 30 percent;
- (5) significant budget savings can be achieved if, before considering new construction, Federal agencies aggressively explore the possibilities of purchasing or leasing suitable office buildings available in the market or acquiring suitable real estate under the control of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or Resolution Trust Corporation;
- (6) the physical space requirements of Federal agencies and the judiciary are too often overstated and inflexible and, therefore, do not permit the acquisition or lease of existing properties which may be suitable and cost-effective;
- (7) the Office of Management and Budget scorekeeping rules may be discouraging agencies from entering into the most responsible arrangements for securing office space (for example, in some cases, a lease/purchase agreement may be most cost-effective but the Office of Management and Budget scorekeeping rules require that the budget authority and outlays for the entire obligation, paid over a period of years, be scored in the year the contract is signed); and
- (8) the Federal Buildings Fund, established in 1972 as a revolving fund to cover the General Services Administration's cost of rent, repairs, renovations, and to pay for the construction of new Federal buildings, and funded by the rent agencies pay to the General Services Administration, has failed to be self-sustaining and has required billions in appropriations to finance new construction.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the President should direct the Office of Management and Budget to review Federal property management policies to ensure better coordination, maximize efficiency, and achieve cost savings;

(2) the Director of the Office of Management and Budget should encourage the General Services Administration, the Department of Defense, the Postal Service, and all other Federal agencies and the Judiciary, when appropriate and based on the cost-effectiveness, to modify building requirements in such a way as to allow for the purchase, lease, or lease/purchase of existing buildings at market rates, or to purchase Resolution Trust Corporation-owned and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation-owned real estate rather than seek new construction of buildings;

(3) the Director of the Office of Management and Budget should review scorekeeping rules for Federal property leasing, lease/purchase, construction and acquisition to permit flexibility and improve long-term cost-effectiveness; and

(4) the Director of the Office of Management and Budget should review the General Services Administration's management of the Federal Buildings Fund to determine why the Fund is not self-sustaining and has not met its objectives, and, if necessary, recommend policy changes to enable the Fund to become self-sustaining.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

DURENBERGER AMENDMENT ON ETHANOL BTU EXEMPTION

• Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, although I am known as one of the Senate's many ethanol supporters, I was one of the majority of Senators who could not support the amendment offered Wednesday night by the senior Senator from Minnesota exempting ethanol from the Btu tax.

As the sponsors of this amendment know, I, and many stalwart supporters of ethanol who voted for Senator WELLSTONE's amendment yesterday, were forced to oppose this second approach. We believe that the budget resolution simply cannot dictate to the Finance Committee what revenues to raise to meet a particular target, as this amendment did. We are concerned that mandating unspecified domestic discretionary spending cuts, as this amendment did, is an irresponsible shot in the dark that could hurt people who desperately need help.

And so I simply want to state for the record, on behalf of the dozens of ethanol supporters who could not support this amendment, that we opposed it for reasons unrelated to ethanol.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, I wish to make clear that the reports of the bipartisan ethanol coalition's demise have been way off the mark.

Between the two ethanol amendments considered this week, which addressed the same substantive end through varying means, the bottom line is that 79 Senators went on record as having supported exempting ethanol from the Btu tax.

Seventy-nine Senators, Mr. President.

Despite the confusing political and procedural jockeying of the last few days, our bipartisan coalition remains very much in tact, and the support for ethanol remains stronger than ever. •

MONTANA STATE UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE—A CENTENNIAL

• Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, today I rise to pay tribute to an institution that has done great things for agriculture in both Montana and the entire Nation. This week the College of Agriculture at Montana State University will celebrate its centennial. Having come from an agriculture background, I realize the importance of agriculture research. The type of research done at MSU is broad. Farming and ranching activities in our country are changing rapidly, and this is the direct result of the people and facilities in our university systems.

At MSU, the College of Agriculture has worked on projects ranging from safflowers to weed management techniques at the bioscience center. The college has done well in the past, and the entire MSU community—and the whole State of Montana—should be proud.

In addition, the college has taken an active role in helping nations around the world learn more effective farming techniques. I have heard from MSU faculty members visiting places like the former Soviet Union where they are sharing with, and learning from, people—this interaction is important for all parties involved.

Also, the college has done tremendous research on the economic side of agriculture. Often, policymakers in Washington do not understand the complex issues which make up agriculture economics. Studies at MSU have helped to shed light on many issues before Congress.

Montanans have their work cut out in trying to give the Ag school every advantage possible for the future. Currently, the college is in the capable hands of Barry Jacobsen. As dean, he has set the agenda for the future, and I look forward to continuing to support this institution.

There are events planned this week to mark the 100th birthday of the College of Agriculture at MSU. People in Bozeman have much to celebrate about the college, and I wish them the best in years ahead. •

HONORING THE VICTIMS OF THE MARCH 25, 1949, BALTIC DEPORTATIONS

• Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, yesterday marked the 44th anniversary of a tragic period in the history of the Baltic peoples. On the night of March 24 through the morning of the 25th, 1949, tens of thousands of men, women, and children were taken from their homes and deported to Siberia under the barbaric rule of Stalinist Russia. Over 600,000 people lost their lives in this horrendous act of cruelty.

This attempt to break the spirit of the Baltic people and bring about their subservience to the Soviet occupation did not succeed. The spirit of the Baltic people would not die. Their desire for freedom was not quenched until their independence was finally restored after the August coup in the former Soviet Union. Latvians, Lithuanians, and Estonians will not soon forget this great tragedy in their lives, despite their recently declared independence. The deportations serve as a symbol to the Baltic people that they can not take their freedom for granted and that independence and human rights are to be cherished and ardently protected.

While the Baltic States have finally freed themselves from the grip of Soviet rule, they still have a hard road to travel. The current economic challenges which they face are formidable and intricate. As I have in the past, I once again call upon the United States to support the economic reforms and advances pursued by these new States. Through technological and other aid, we must make sure that Lithuania, Estonia, and Latvia each have the chance to enjoy the sovereignty and democratic freedom for which they fought for so long.

At this time, I also call for the removal of the remaining Russian military forces from the Baltic countries. These forces represent a continuing violation of Baltic sovereignty and represent a constant reminder of the indignities of foreign control. Not until these forces are removed can the Baltic States truly free themselves from the bonds of the past. I urge President Clinton to raise this issue with Boris Yeltsin during the upcoming summit.

Once again on this anniversary of the Baltic deportations, let us not forget the harsh struggle which Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia had to endure. We must honor the Balts' bravery and courage. And in commemorating them, let us provide the support to enable them to take a prominent position among the growing list of democratic, independent nations.●

WARSAW GHETTO REMEMBRANCE DAY IN NEW YORK STATE

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to commemorate the upcoming 50th anniversary of the Warsaw ghetto uprising, the observance of which will occur on April 18, 1993. We must all recognize that as this marks the figurative half-century mark since the greatest crimes in the history of man, that the remaining survivors are aging—many have passed on. It is our sacred duty to pass on the lessons of the Holocaust to the future generations. As our sages remind us, "Forgetfulness is exile, remembrance is the key to redemption."

The Warsaw ghetto uprising was the first organized civilian resistance in Nazi Europe, in which a handful of Jewish men and women, boys and girls, gave new meaning to self-sacrifice by rising up against a powerful German army. In the end, nothing remained of the ghetto but smoke and rubble. Yet the courage and spirit of those Jews who fought a desperate struggle for freedom half a century ago still echo down the years. They demand that those who lived through the horrors of the Holocaust—and all generations to come—remember, record, and teach its lessons.

Particularly today, anti-Semitism and other hatred continues unabated here in our own New York and the world over, as documented by the Anti-Defamation League. Whether we speak of the Crown Heights, Brooklyn Pogrom of 2 years ago or the ethnic cleansing in Bosnia and Herzegovina or world terrorism or any other measure of man's inhumanity to man, the lessons of the Holocaust provide a rare opportunity for man's salvation.

As thousands will gather in New York City's Madison Square Garden on Sunday, April 18, 1993, in solemn commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the Warsaw ghetto uprising and in remembrance of the 6 million Jews who lost their lives in the sanctification of the Lord's name, I urge all New Yorkers to observe that day as Warsaw Ghetto Remembrance Day.●

GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise to commemorate Greek Independence day. One hundred seventy-two years ago, the Greek people began a revolution which eventually freed them from the grip of the Ottoman Empire. This revolution ended over 400 years of Ottoman rule which deprived Greeks of their basic human rights and independence. During the 1820's, with the moral support of the United States Government and the active participation of several United States citizens, the Greek people eventually succeeded in throwing off their foreign yoke and reestablished their sovereign country. Because of this victory and the profound democratic tradition it represents, we today celebrate the anniversary of the establishment of the modern Greek state.

America and Greece share a common heritage. We both base our governmental systems upon the ancient Greek concept of democracy. Indeed, our Founding Fathers drew heavily from Greek tradition to form the cornerstone of our new country and representative democracy. Madison, Hamilton, and Jefferson all stressed the Greek contribution to their efforts and viewed the ancient Greeks as their guiding light in developing our new government during the constitutional Congress. It is perhaps ironic, but also highly appropriate, that the Greeks used the American Revolution as a model for their own struggle and the United States Declaration of Independence as the basis for their own declaration. In a sense, our traditions have been intertwined since James Madison and the other Founding Fathers built the Constitution around ancient Greek notions of justice and democratic government.

Greece has continually manifested a commitment to uphold its long tradition of democracy. In addition to fighting bravely on the side of the allies during World War I and World War II, Greece endured one of the more brutal occupations during the latter war. Following World War II, the Greek people, with the help of the American Marshall plan, fought off a Communist insurgency, earning the admiration of Presidents Harry S. Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower. As stated by Eisenhower at the time:

Greece asked no favor except the opportunity to stand for those rights [for] which it believed, and it gave to the world an example of battle . . . a battle that thrilled the hearts of all free men and free women everywhere.

Today, Greece's position in NATO has won the respect of its allies and has proven an ongoing commitment to its ancient ideals.

Because America has such a historic and close relationship with Greece, it is imperative that we carefully analyze the situation in the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia and its dispute with Greece. It is my belief that the United States should not hastily recognize this new republic without fully considering the concerns of Greece and its people.

As we celebrate the 172nd anniversary of Greek Independence, let us recognize the contribution of Greek tradition to the American cultural mosaic. Much of what we learn in philosophy, math and science is based upon the theories and findings of the ancient Greeks. In addition, much of our art and sculpture also has its basis in Greek tradition. In my home State of Michigan, we have Greektown, where one can sample some of the best tasting Greek food anywhere while surrounded by one of the strongest Greek communities in the country. It is this rich Greek tradition which so permeates the American experience and culture. And so, on this anniversary of Greek independence, let us honor and support the democracies which have been newly established across the globe. As one of the first constitutional democracies, it is our duty to help those others who are trying to establish democracies in their countries. So, on this day of celebration of democracy, let us recall the Greek experience as we seek to assist other nations now travelling the difficult road to freedom.●

AGRICULTURE HALL OF FAME

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, today five individuals who have provided outstanding leadership in the growth and development of Arkansas' agriculture industry will be inducted into the Arkansas Agriculture Hall of Fame.

The Agriculture Hall of Fame is a statewide recognition program sponsored by the Greater Little Rock Chamber of Commerce and honors individual contributions to Arkansas agriculture and community economic development.

The five 1992 inductees are James T. "Red" Hudson, Dr. Harry Rosen (posthumously), L.F. "Fred" Seidenstricker, John H. Stephens, and I.I. "Ish" Stivers.

Red Hudson of Rogers, AR, has devoted his entire adult life to a number of agribusiness operations. From modest beginnings as a clerk in a major feed store, Red has founded a near billion dollar food company. Hudson Company operates 15 processing plants and provides employment for over 8,500 people.

Dr. Harry Rosen of Fayetteville was a pioneer in agricultural research. From 1918 until his death in 1962, his research efforts resulted in the development of a number of disease-resistant varieties of oats, wheat and roses. Dr. Rosen's labors added undetermined increased yields in small grain crops.

Fred Seidenstricker of Hazen has spent his life on the Grand Prairie, but his influence has been felt around the world. He has been an innovator in production and marketing practices of all the crops produced in the area of our State where his family settled in 1900. He was instrumental in forming the Arkansas Grain Corporation and the Soybean Division of Riceland Foods. The Seidenstrickers are consummate hosts to farm groups, from both this country and abroad. Their ability to roll out the red carpet to foreign visitors has resulted in numerous orders for Arkansas-produced grains when their guests have returned home.

John Stephens of Marion has been devoted to helping farmers utilize proven innovative techniques in agriculture. As a cooperative extension agent, he conducted the first anhydrous ammonia and cotton picker demonstrations in Arkansas. He helped organize a cotton compress and a grain marketing co-op. As an employee of the American Soybean Association, he helped organize soybean associations in Arkansas and in 15 other states.

Ish Stivers of Hot Springs spent 20 years teaching vocational agriculture and almost 200 of his students have attended college in some field of agriculture. His was one of the top 10 Future Farmers of America chapters in the country for 10 years. As a vice-president and loan officer for a local bank, he has helped many young farmers establish or expand their family farming operations. He has served as a board member of Southern Nazarene University, Garland County Community College and Quapaw Vo-Tech School.

Mr. President, I am proud of the accomplishments of these Arkansians who have dedicated themselves to the promotion of Arkansas agriculture. I join their many friends, colleagues and relatives in saluting them as they are tapped for membership into the Arkansas Agriculture Hall of Fame.●

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in commemorating Greek Independence Day. I am also pleased to note that Senate Joint Resolution 22 marking this day became law earlier this month.

Yesterday marks the 172d anniversary of the beginning of the revolution that freed the Greek people from the Ottoman Empire. We welcome and salute this anniversary and look forward to the next 172 years of Greek democracy and prosperity.

Our Nation has welcomed and benefited from the rich tradition and ideas brought forth by countless Greek immigrants through the years. Greek-Americans have adapted and succeeded in the United States. Their contributions are numerous and have greatly enriched the American experience. And not just American life; all of western civilization derives much of its genius from the ancient Greeks. The British romantic poet, Percy Bysshe Shelley, said, "We are all Greeks! Our laws, our literature, our religion, our art, have their roots in Greece."

Let us join Greek-Americans and Greeks around the world in celebrating Greek Independence Day.●

TRIBUTE TO RANDALL L. TOBIAS

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a distinguished citizen of New Jersey, Randall L. Tobias, chairman of AT&T.

Mr. Tobias is being honored tonight at the University of Indiana on the eve of the dedication of the new Wendell W. Wright Education Building. This state-of-the-art facility will be a national center to develop, demonstrate and disseminate products and practices relating to educational technology for instruction. Mr. Tobias, as chairman of AT&T, is being recognized as a major force in making this important teaching resource a reality.

The new building and the programs it will make available are a powerful testimonial to what can be accomplished when an academic institution, the government and the private sector work together. The beneficiaries will be our educational system, our children and our future. I salute Randall Tobias for his vision and for his successful leadership in this impressive project.●

Whereas the Congress recognizes that an understanding of the heritage of all ethnic groups in the Nation contributes to the unity of this Nation; and

Whereas the continuous growth of the public's awareness of and interest in the Civil War period remains an integral part of America's cultural heritage;

Whereas the study, preservation, and interpretation of literature and sites associated with this period are imbedded in the educational and cultural heritage of our country;

Whereas the beginning of the Civil War occurred in April of 1861 with the firing on Fort Sumter in Charleston, South Carolina, and the effective ending of the Civil War occurred in April of 1865 with the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia at Appomattox, Virginia, making April the most important month of the year in Civil War history; and

Whereas forty-nine states reported more than forty thousand cases of Lyme disease from 1982 through 1991;

Whereas Lyme disease knows no season—the peak west coast and southern season is November to June, the peak east coast and northern season is April to October, and victims suffer all year round;

Whereas Lyme disease, easily treated soon after the bite with oral antibiotics, can be difficult to treat (by painful intravenous injections) if not discovered in time, and for some may be incurable;

Whereas Lyme disease is difficult to diagnose because there is no reliable test that can directly detect when the infection is present;

Whereas the early symptoms of Lyme disease may include rashes, severe headaches, fever, fatigue, and swollen glands;

Whereas if left untreated Lyme disease can affect every body system causing severe damage to the heart, brain, eyes, joints, lungs, liver, spleen, blood vessels, and kidneys;

Whereas the bacteria can cross the placenta and affect fetal development;

Whereas our children are the most vulnerable and most widely affected group;

Whereas the best cure for Lyme disease is prevention;

Whereas prevention of Lyme disease depends upon public awareness; and

S.J. RES. 49

Whereas the delivery of education and training through electronically mediated instruction has opened new opportunities for kindergarten through twelfth grade education, higher education, and the retraining of America's workforce;

Whereas the United States Distance Learning Association has chosen the week of March 28, 1993, through April 3, 1993, as a week of special recognition for the achievements of distance learning professionals; and

Whereas April 1, 2, and 3, 1993, will be the dates of the Third Annual International Distance Learning Conference, which will convene in the Washington, D.C. area: Now, therefore, be it

The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

NATIONAL FORMER PRISONER OF WAR RECOGNITION DAY

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 54) designating April 9, 1993, and April 9, 1994, as "National Former Prisoner of War Recognition Day" was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed; as follows:

S.J. RES. 54

Whereas the United States has fought in many wars;

Whereas thousands of members of the Armed Forces of the United States who served in such wars were captured by the enemy and held as prisoners of war;

Whereas many such prisoners of war were subjected to brutal and inhumane treatment by their captors in violation of international codes and customs for the treatment of prisoners of war and died, or were disabled, as a result of such treatment; and

Whereas the great sacrifices of such prisoners of war and their families deserve national recognition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That April 9, 1993, and April 9, 1994, is designated as "National Former Prisoner of War Recognition Day" in honor of the members of the Armed Forces of the United States who have been held as prisoners of war, and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to commemorate such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.
